Dr. Peters loved to spend time in his studio where he created wood carvings and sculptures from native and exotic woods. Several of his works can be seen on campus. Two of his sculptures can be seen in the Recreation Complex. The walnut sculpture titled "Achievement" is an individual with uplifted arms signaling victory. It has a forward looking face, one of achievement for the future. The Recreational Services office is home for the other display titled "Participation is Winning." The outside of the sculpture represents constant improvement through participation. The sculpture's center is filled with carved representations of nutrition, fitness, and sports made from various types of wood.

Dr. Peters will be remembered for being student-centered, compassionate, moral, and highly respected. Students were moved by his warmth, gentle humor, and caring attitude. His ability to extend an understanding of the real meaning of goodness as a human quality is his legacy to learning. Chester E. "Chet" Peters lives on in the Recreation Complex as his spirit lives in the hearts and minds of the thousands who drew inspiration from him.

TAXES MUST BE MAILED TODAY

The Manhattan Post Office will stay open until 11 tonight for people waiting until the last minute to file their tax returns.

From 4 to 6:30 p.m., K-State accounting students will be at the Manhattan Public Library to give a little extra help for those lost in paperwork.

Even if you owe money to the IRS, you should file your return. You can always pay it later. You can also get a form that will grant you a six-month extension on filing.

► LINEAR TUITION

Tuition allocation will stay the same

Bill Bontempo
staff writer

Students will begin paying $69 per credit hour next fall because of the switch to linear tuition, but the way tuition money is distributed within the University will not change immediately.

John Struve, budget office director, said almost all tuition money goes to the salaries of faculty on nine-month contracts. A small percentage of tuition money also goes to pay for summer school operations and library funding.

"We allocate by function rather than to specific departments," Struve said.

A combination of one-third tuition money and two-thirds money from state legislative appropriations goes into what is called general-use money.

"These two funds are combined to run the basic functions of the University," Struve said.

According to the Journal of the Senate of Topeka, the Kansas legislature passed a budget of $80,590,509 for K-State in fiscal year 1997. This figure combined with expected tuition

► TUITION DEBATE

Students to pay by hour, not set semester rate

Brent Smitko
staff reporter

Linear tuition is brewing a new debate on K-State's campus, as students enroll for fall 1996.

With the new linear system students will be paying tuition based on the credit hours they take, not the average hours taken.

In previous semesters students' tuition was based on 15 credit hours, which is the average number of hours students enroll in, John Potter, Student Senate chair, said.

However, next fall students who generally take more than the average number of credit hours will be faced with the decision of whether to pay for certain courses like marching band, debate and forensics.

"There will be more people taking courses for no credit," Potter said. This was a main issue when linear tuition was debated, he said.

Don Foster, University registrar, said there are 25 to 30 courses being offered next fall that have the option to be taken for no credit.

MUD, COLD WIND AND A BROKEN EARTHBALL COULD NOT STOP THE PARTICIPANTS OF THE SECOND ANNUAL EARTHBALL PHILANTHROPY YESTERDAY.

Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority and Delta Chi fraternity sponsored the philanthropy to benefit the Manhattan Emergency Shelter. Last year the houses raised $1,400. This year a similar amount of money was expected to be collected.

There were two competing teams from Sigma Alpha Epsilon. The first SAE team won the championship Sunday by beating Alpha Gamma Rho, but the AGRs won the philanthropy by winning the recycling competition and T-shirt sales competition, in addition to gathering points from Sunday's game.

By the day's end Kappa Alpha Theta had beaten Alpha Xi Delta to become the sorority Earthball champions by winning the game and tying for points in the recycling competition.

Earthball '96 was a week-long event that involved collecting aluminum cans outside the K-State Student Union last week for points, and it ended with the games Sunday.

The actual Earthball competition's goal is to push a huge ball, bigger than the players, across the opponent's end lines.

During the process players got pushed and sometimes flattened by the ball, which left them lying in mud.

Players could be seen walking around after their game with mud on their clothes, hands,

► MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS SOCIETY

MS Walk unites community

■ About 139 walk in foundation's annual fund-raising event

Laurel Howell
staff writer

If it had been a race, Dan Dodge would have been the winner.

Not because he was first to cross the finish line, but because he crossed the finish line at all.

Dodge, a multiple sclerosis sufferer, finished the nine-mile course at 2 p.m.

Most of the other participants left around noon, but many stayed to cheer as Dodge finished the walk. He was accompanied by his two sons and embraced at the finish by family, friends and volunteers.

Dodge thanked the volunteers from Alpha Delta Pi sorority, who stayed to cheer for him, for giving their time.

"Unlike you, I actually have something to gain from all this," Dodge said.

This was the fifth-annual MS Walk to benefit the Multiple Sclerosis Society, and about 139 people participated.

Most of the volunteers were from the ADPi sorority, which has adopted the walk as its all-house community service project for the second year, said Renelle Everett, chairwoman of the Manhattan MS Walk and senior in accounting.

Thomas More Catholic Church donated its facilities for the walk. The amount of money raised is not known yet.

"Our goal was for each person to raise $125. I know we have many people who raised over $75, and Dan Dodge raised over $500," Everett said.

Primerica Financial Services participated in the walk, and as a group it raised $3,000 in pledges, David Faust, district manager with Primerica, said.

Faust and his wife Annmarie Faust brought their 4-year-old triplets, Amanda, Brianna and Christina, along on the walk.

The triplets said they had fun and wanted to come back. "But next time, with our bikes," Amanda Faust said.

Scott Fritchen and Brian Anderson, walk route coordinators, said the walk went smoothly, with few serious problems.

"Somebody got a blister," Fritchen said. "I had to run to Dara's and get a Band-Aid."

► DEATH TOLL CONTINUES TO RISE IN BEIRUT, SOUTHERN LEBANON

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli aircraft bombarded guerrilla strongholds in Beirut and southern Lebanon Sunday, doubling the tide of refugees to 400,000 and provoking guerrilla pledges to turn northern Israel into a "fiery hell."

Undaunted by Israel's four-day-old aerial barrage, Hezbollah guerrillas barraged northern Israel with rockets that came crashing down every 20 minutes for seven hours. One person was wounded, and an empty school and other property were damaged.

Three Lebanese civilians were killed, and seven were wounded in Sunday's raids, Lebanese security sources said.

All told, 28 people have been killed and 105 injured on both sides since the violence began last week.

The Shiite Muslim Hezbollah opposes Arab-Israeli peacemaking and has been fighting for years to drive Israeli troops from the buffer zone they occupy in southern Lebanon.

Daily skirmishes exploded last week into an Israeli offensive meant to halt a recent wave of Hezbollah attacks on Israel.

► ARCHBISHOP FLEES MONROVIA FOLLOWING 9 DAYS OF FIGHTING

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — Through a week of slaughter and chaos, Liberia's Roman Catholic bishop had kept his optimism, praying Monrovia would stabilize and refusing to abandon his people.

But after the main Catholic church was looted and he himself was robbed, even Archbishop Michael Francis gave up and fled the ruined city Sunday with his mother.

"In the next two weeks, there could be a mass starvation," he said before reluctantly boarding one of the U.S. helicopters that have ferried 1,642 foreigners out of the embattled seaside capital.

Thousands of hungry, homeless people wandered the streets of Monrovia Sunday, searching for food and shelter while shelling and small-arms fire threatened a flimsy two-day-old truce.

All the shops and office buildings in the capital have been looted and most of them destroyed since government troops and rebels started fighting nine days ago.

► KEVORKIAN'S COURT CAMPAIGN PROVOKES CIRCUS-LIKE SHOW

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Jack Kevorkian is back in court. It is show time.

See the doctor mugging for the cameras in cardboard stocks, dragging a fake ball and chain.

Now he is parading in a white wig and knee breeches — his retro-colonial look.

Always nearby is attorney, spokesman and agent Geoffrey Nels Fieger.

Watch Fieger call the prosecutor a clown and insult the judiciary's integrity. Marvel as he shouts, gestures and chortles while strolling down the hall, reporters hanging on every word.

Welcome to Jack and Geoff's Courthouse Circus.

While it angers many in the legal establishment, Fieger's in-your-face sideshow is part of a well-planned campaign to frame the debate in Kevorkian's fight to legalize doctor-assisted suicide.

► CLINTON TRAVELS TO JAPAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton traveled to Japan three years ago as a tough-talking trade warrior. He returns to Asia this week in a markedly different role: America's reassuring commander in chief.

Security problems — not trade disputes — lead the president's agenda on his week-long, round-the-world journey.

Departing Washington late Sunday, he will stop briefly in South Korea before a three-day state visit to Japan. Then he will fly on to Russia for a summit dealing with threats to nuclear safety.

"The president will confront some of the oldest and newest challenges to the security of our nation, from the last unresolved problem of the Cold War — stability on the Korean peninsula — to one of the most urgent new threats we face — nuclear smuggling," Secretary of State Warren Christopher said.

► LAND RETURNS TO JAPANESE

TOKYO (AP) — The U.S. military will give back to Okinawa about 20 percent of the island property it uses for training, but only a small number of American troops will be withdrawn, Defense Secretary William Perry said Sunday.

The land return is the biggest since the United States relinquished control of the island in 1972. Okinawa was captured by U.S. forces during World War II and remains a key to projecting U.S. air, sea and land power in the Pacific.

Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto applauded the U.S. willingness to address Okinawans' concerns about the intrusiveness of American military activities. He also told Perry Japan was willing to study the touchy subject of whether and how Japan could provide support for U.S. forces in the event of an Asian conflict outside of Japan.

CORRECTION

► A story on the new farm bill ran in Friday's Collegian. The quote was attributed to President Clinton; however, the quote came from a press release from the office of Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan.; office. The Collegian regrets the error.

Open House

■ Students, faculty show off K-State

Lynn Wuger

Color-coded paw prints on the sidewalks led visitors in the right direction Saturday as they set out to experience what K-State has to offer during the All-University Open House.

"We came to roam around," Larry Vassar from Omaha, Neb., said.

"We didn't know about this last year before our daughter came to school here. It's really nice, and so far everything looks great."

Vassar's daughter, Alyson Vassar, is a freshman in architecture and said she planned to show her parents around the college.

"I'm going to take them to see the engineering and architecture colleges," Vassar said.

"There are a lot of exhibits to look at, and I want them to see what we have been doing this year."

One out-of-town high school student was attracted to K-State because of the College of Engineering.

"I came to Open House because I heard K-State is one of the best engineering schools in Kansas," Ryan Washburn, Norton resident, said.

"I found out a lot of interesting things when we visited the exhibits. I was probably most fascinated with the heat-exchanger exhibit and the hover craft."

Each college coordinated its own day-long exhibits and by-the-hour activities in buildings around campus. Also, visitors were provided with individual college tours at request.

The K-State Student Union was the center of Open House activities with more than 200 booths representing

► CIVIL ENGINEERING

Lab gives students testing ground

Gina Garvin
staff reporter

Ribbons were cut and the new Civil Infrastructure and Highway Research Testing Laboratory opened its doors Friday.

The lab will allow K-State civil engineering students to test the combined effects of wheel load and temperature on different concrete and asphalt pavements. This is a unique feature, because no other lab around Manhattan does this.

"The lab allows students to do large-scale testing of pavement sections and highway components," said Hani Melhem, assistant professor of civil engineering and director of the lab.

The ceremonies featured an open house followed by a dedication, where several prominent speakers from the K-State College of Engineering, Kansas Department of Transportation and also some members from the engineering firms that helped with the building of the lab spoke.

Speakers included Donald Rathbone, dean of the engineering college; Michael Lackey, assistant secretary and state transportation engineer from KDOT; and Dennis Pauls, of Cardwell International from El Dorado.

The speakers from the different firms helped contribute money for the building and equipment costs of the lab, Melhem said.

The lab cost $370,000, while the cost of the equipment was $300,000. K-State received $910,000 in contributions and grants to help build the lab as well as maintain the lab.

The KDOT also has a two-year commitment for $127,000 for the first year followed by $100,000 the second year with an option for a new proposal the third year the lab is open, Melhem said.

The engineering students will use the lab to help the firms and the KDOT in testing the different types of pavements and how well they hold up under varying conditions, including the testing of earthquakes on the pavements.

"Students will test the effects of the new earthquake protection developed by Hu, Swartz and Kirmser at the lab," Melhem said.

This is just one of the many projects these students will work on at the lab.

JUSTIN HOWARD/Collegian

The Kansas Testing Laboratory for Civil Infrastructure and Highway Research was host to its open house and dedication Friday. The new building and test site is in Manhattan's industrial park. Testing highway pavement prototypes and earthquake-resistant systems are a few of the laboratory's purposes.

REVIEW

SpringDance offers dance variety, strong symbolism

Portia Sisco
staff writer

K-State dancers welcomed spring Friday and Saturday nights with SpringDance '96.

The highlight of the evening was a piece called "Line and Circle," choreographed by Luke Kahlich, professor of dance.

Dancers Jenny Mavrovich, senior in theater, and Ping Wei, graduate student in biochemistry, stunned the audience with their electrical performance.

"It was really interesting working with Ping, especially in a partner situation. Our qualities and preferences were different," Mavrovich said.

In vivid blue costumes, these graceful robots embraced as lovers.

R. Dupere's music built the piece to a stunning climax, with every movement in harmony with the music.

"My movements were linear and sharp, and Ping's were curved and flowing. I would invade his curved movements with my lined ones," Mavrovich said.

"Genesis of a Ball and Other Round Stories," directed by Vera Orlock, epitomized an evolution of creatures through their movements, interactions and responses.

These friendly ball people seem to grow more serious in each movement of the piece. In one of the final scenes, each dancer holds a ball that seems to contain a thought or feeling.

Their vocalization starts as grunts and develops into speech, and they share pieces of tragedy with the audience.

One dancer struggled to speak in Spanish as the other dancers pulled and tugged at his body.

"We would have ideas and something would offset it. Most of the scenes came from us goofing off and taking a break, and Vera would see it and like it," Dena Fox, freshman in theater, said.

"Journey," the guest artist selection choreographed by Nancy Keyser-Shade, was packed with symbolism. The eight dancers wore white, flowing costumes in front of a sky background.

This dreamy piece had a practiced strength that belied the five days the dancers had to prepare.

"Taking Flight," another piece by Kahlich, introduced stunning lifts performed by Steve Hoekstra, graduate student in psychology, and Diana Yamabayashi, junior in theater.

This duet was aerial in nature. Although it had a softer quality than "Line and Circle," it was dramatic because of the dancers' incredible strength and poise.

The music, also composed by Dupere, featured a throbbing violin that added to the natural melodrama of the dance.

Hoekstra's selection, titled "Quest," could be described in one word: beauty.

Using a natural synchronization, the dancers dominated the stage.

"It was more movement. It was an easy piece to perform, but we ended up thinking too hard. We relaxed by just doing it rather than thinking about it," Fox said.

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" closed the evening on a classical note with music by Mozart.

Choreographed by Joyce Yagerline, dance instructor, this ballet selection included a solo and a corps of dancers in spring colors.

SpringDance '96 offered a rare variety of classical, modern and experimental dance.

Expo draws crowd to see products, local services

Laurel Hovell
staff writer

This weekend businesses and organizations from Manhattan and the surrounding area gathered at Bramlage Coliseum and Brandeberry Indoor Complex to talk with visitors, give away food and prizes and demonstrate their products at Expo '96.

The Manhattan Chamber of Commerce and Manhattan Area Builders Association co-sponsored the fifth annual business, home, boat and outdoor show Saturday and Sunday.

"We want to show people what we do," Jean Rundle of Creative Memories, a home-based business, said.

The business show in Bramlage had more than 80 exhibits featuring products and services.

Some had products to demonstrate, others just wanted to share information about their causes with the public.

Riley County Police Department drew a large crowd with a display of confiscated materials, and Consumer Credit Counseling Service offered information on obtaining a free credit report.

The home show in Brandeberry had more than 70 exhibits of products for the home, lawn and garden.

The displays and exhibits included Mennonite-crafted furniture, hot tubs, cabinets, light fixtures and two clowns making balloon animals.

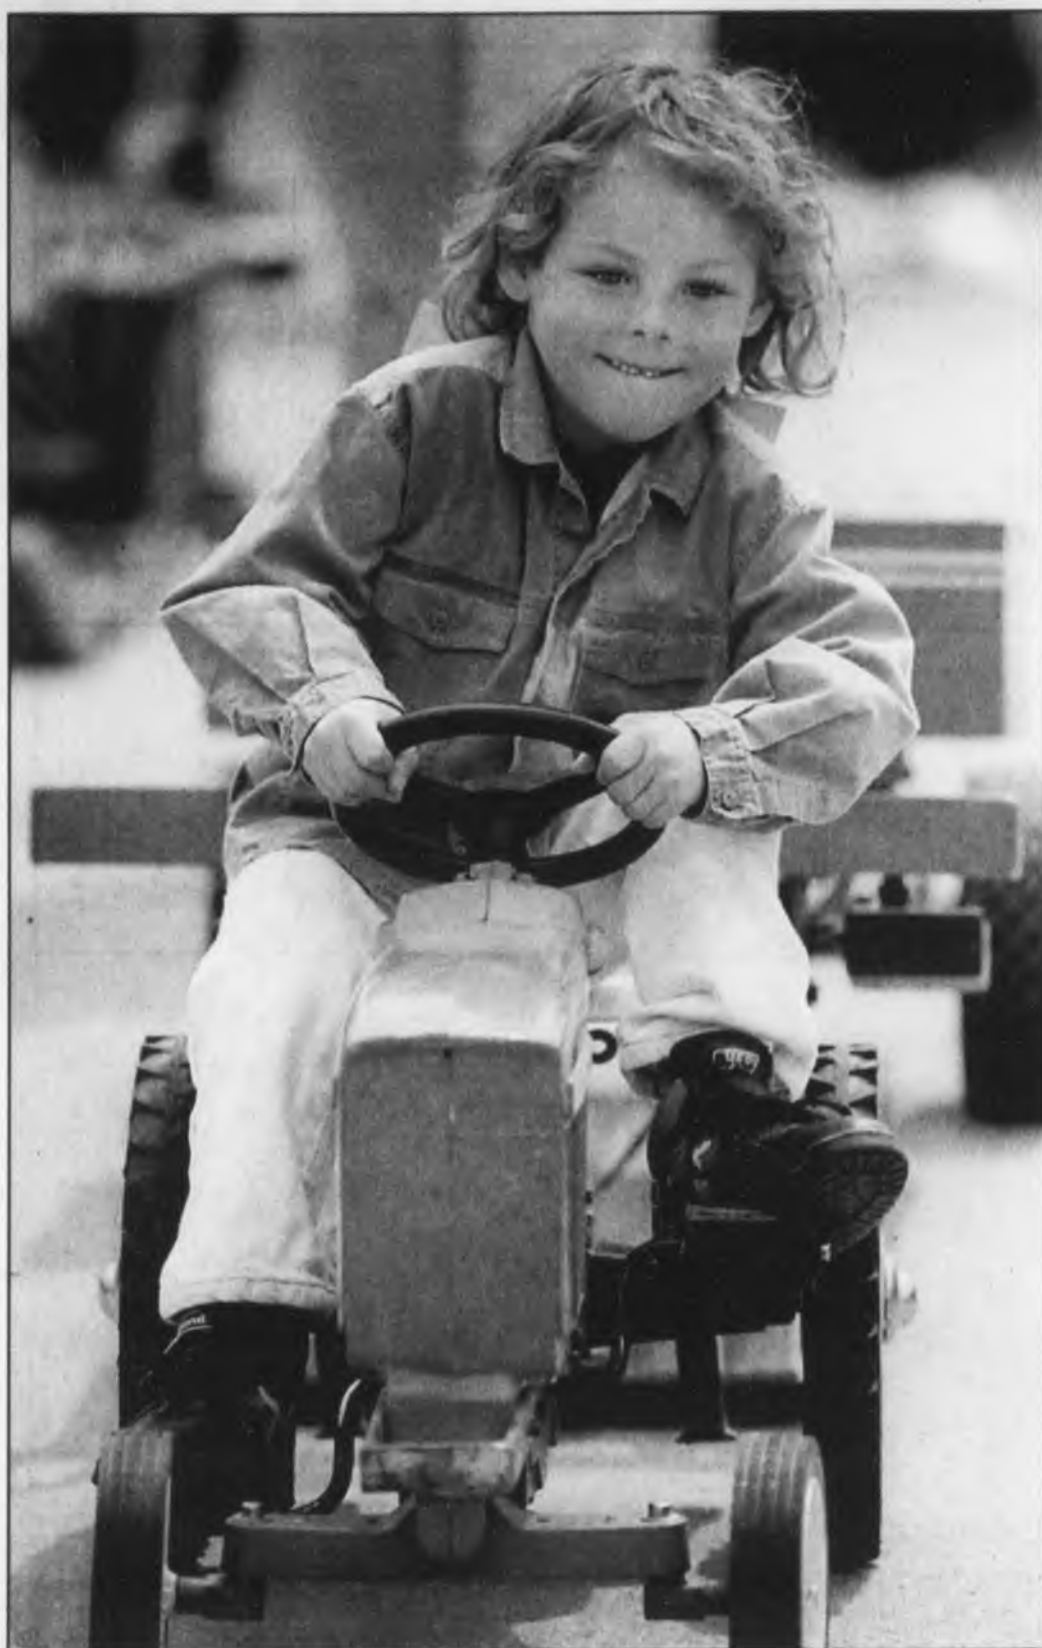

The boat and outdoor show on the arena floor in Bramlage featured boats, campers, canoes, personal watercraft, motorcycles and hot tubs from several area dealers.

The Flint Hills Ski Club and the K-State Ski Team offered two informational seminars Saturday afternoon.

Chris Ogburn, tournament walleye angler, Leonard Jacobs, tournament bass fisherman, and Rick Dykstra, host of the TV show "Goin' Fishin'" offered seminars throughout the weekend.

At 2 p.m. Saturday children ages 4 to 12 competed in Pedal Power, a foot-powered mini-tractor pull in the KSU Stadium west parking lot.

Participants received ribbons for competing, and winners in each age division will advance to the Kansas Pull-Off at the Kansas State Fair in September in Hutchinson.

Pedal power

◀ Straining under increasing weight, D.J. Yuhn, age 4, pedals his way down a 30-foot track in the KSU Stadium west parking lot Saturday afternoon during the Expo '96 Pedal Power mini-tractor pull. The pedal tractor's trailers were set up just like those in the gas-powered tractor pulls. The further the distance traveled, the heavier the weight became.

▼ Madison Joyce, age 4, gets encouragement from one of the Pedal Power mini-tractor pull officials as she pushes for a "complete pull" of 30 feet during the 4-and-under competition Saturday afternoon at the KSU Stadium west parking lot. Joyce won her division and will compete for the Kansas state title in September at the Kansas State Fair in Hutchinson.

face and hair but with smiles on their faces.

"We had a blast. Other than people bleeding and with broken bones. It was great," Jesse Winn, a Triangle freshman in animal biology, said jokingly.

With the temperature in the 30s and a north wind that made it feel colder, everyone involved was trying to stay warm.

"We're cold, but I think everyone is surprised at how much fun it is," Erin Schnepf, sophomore in business, said.

Winn and the rest of his Triangle teammates showed up in skirts, but adrenaline kept them from feeling the cold, Winn said.

The Theta Xis also wore Earthball uniforms, sporting sleeveless Chris Hanson/Aaron Otto campaign shirts.

They were back for their second year and anticipating their game.

Rain loomed on the horizon all day

Sunday, but even that was not going to stop Earthball.

"If it rains, we're going to play anyway. The teams paid to play, so we want them to have a full day of Earthball," Joanna Willits, a Kappa junior in elementary education, said.

The possibility of rain did not bother the participants. Triangle was actually asking for it. "We hope it rains. It would give us an advantage because if we get hurt, we don't have to go to school on Monday," Winn said.

TUITION

enue of $39,226,385 next year make up an operating general-use budget of $119,816,894.

Tuition funds are allocated by James Coffman, provost; Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement; and Thomas Rawson, vice president of administration and finance.

All money generated by tuition is available for general-use money.

Despite the change to a linear fee system, Struve said he does not anticipate any immediate changes in the way tuition funds are distributed, but the distribution system might change in the future.

In most years, tuition increases are based on an estimated rate of inflation and an estimate of the state general fund increase.

The University will continue to base tuition increases on these estimates, but next fall there will be an increase in tuition as a result of the linear fee system.

Last year Kansas residents taking undergraduate courses paid $883 a semester for tuition regardless of the number of hours taken.

Under this flat fee based system, classes cost an average $59 an hour based on a 15-credit hour schedule.

Under the new system students taking 15 credit hours will pay $945.

According to the schedule of tuition charges for fiscal year 1997 produced by the University budget office, the linear-fee system amounts to an increase of about 7 percent for students taking 15 hours.

Struve said the linear fee might meet some criticism from students who feel the system punishes students who wish to take more credit hours.

He said the budget office will adapt to the new system and make any necessary changes in the distribution of funds.

But even with the option of no-credit, no-pay, there are some students who will be paying more because such courses are required for their degrees.

"If I take 19 credit hours, which is average for music education majors, I will end up paying $1,450 for tuition," Sara Pomerence, sophomore in music education, said.

"How is that helping me?"

Shaunak Patel, junior in chemical engineering, said with the accessibility of student loans he would try to wait to see what the increases in tuition would be.

"It is more of an increase than I'm used to," Patel said.

"If it continues to increase $100 every semester, yes, I would definitely be upset."

The debate boils down to linear tuition benefiting the part-time students and those taking the average number of credit hours, but penalizing full-time students who take more than the average.

"They should be helping students who want to be more than average," Pomerence said.

If students pay per credit hour, it hurts the students whose majors require more hours to graduate than another, she said.

John Struve, budget office director at K-State, said when the linear tuition system was developed they took their best estimate.

It was unclear how students would respond, but there is a possibility that some improvements could be made, Struve said.

Jacy Schmidt, Manhattan resident, looks at the sun through a telescope. Normally, looking into the sun would be blinding, but a blue mylar filter in the telescope made viewing safe.

campus services and student organizations.

An information booth provided visitors with campus maps, a listing of the day's activities and answers to any questions they might have concerning Open House or K-State in general.

"People will come and ask us about campus activities they should see and how to get there," said Todd Lakin, student member of the coordinating council for Open House and senior in industrial engineering.

"It's set up so people are able to come someplace and get their questions answered."

Lakin said he felt the 13-month preparation prior to Open House was worth the time and effort.

"We have given away tons of balloons and millions of stickers today," Lakin said.

"My numbers may be a little off, but I think everything has gone well this year," he said.

"It makes the work we have put into it that much better knowing people leave here with more knowledge about the University."

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, also said he was pleased with the turnout.

"I think we have met our expectations today," Bosco said.

"We want people to leave here with a strong, positive impression of K-State and a genuine feeling of comfort. We want them to get caught up in all the excitement, and by looking at all the smiles on people's faces, we've accomplished that feeling."

► KANSAS LAW

Debate heats up over same-sex marriagesBrent Smitko
staff reporter

The debate about same-sex marriages took a blow April 11 when Gov. Bill Graves signed into law a bill that prevents the state from recognizing such marriages — even if they occur in other states.

Kai Draper, assistant professor of philosophy, doesn't view the same-sex debate as a profound issue.

"Of course same-sex marriages should be allowed," Draper said.

The problem arises when conservatives begin to make a religious issue out of it, he said.

The signing of the anti-marriage bill comes in response to the probable legalization of same-sex marriages in Hawaii, whose Supreme Court ruled in 1993 that its law banning same-sex marriages was unconstitutional.

Deb Taylor, office assistant for human resource services, said faculty and students seem more liberal to gay issues, but said she is upset about the passage of the bill.

"The way the anti-marriage bill was handled is a good example of what is currently happening in our Kansas House and Senate," Taylor said. "Ultra-conservatives are introducing hate legislation to advance the white, conservative and religious extremist definition of the traditional heterosexual family."

Kelly Zeller, sophomore in dance, said she doesn't see anything wrong with same-sex marriages.

"If they really love each other, I don't see how we can stop them from doing what they want to do," Zeller said.

According to Taylor such legislation is proposed and passed in many instances without the public's knowledge.

Same-sex marriage status

Same-sex marriage is at various stages of the legal process across the nation. Kansas prohibits same-sex marriages and does not recognize such marriages from states where it is legal. Hawaii could become the first state to completely legalize same-sex marriages.

Student dies in wreck

A K-State student was killed early Monday evening after being involved in a motorcycle-car collision at the intersection of Anderson and Denison avenues.

Eric A. Dupuis, freshman in park resource management, died after being hit on his motorcycle.

Sgt. Kurt Moldrup, shift supervisor with Riley County Police Department, said the other vehicle was heading eastbound on Anderson Avenue waiting to make a left-hand turn.

“He was heading westbound on Anderson,” Moldrup said. “At this point, it is unclear of who had the right-of-way.”

Moldrup said Dupuis was not wearing a helmet at the time of the accident, and the accident is still being investigated.

Estelle West, senior in chemistry, was the driver of the other car. She had no injuries.

Dupuis was transported to Memorial Hospital with severe head injuries, where he was pronounced dead.

About 25 close friends of Dupuis' gathered late Monday night to remember their friend and motorcycle racing buddy.

Armando Cardenas, sophomore in secondary education and Dupuis' roommate, said they both left the apartment, and Eric was on his way to study for his architecture and design class at the park.

“We all knew him as Duppee or the Dupster,” Cardenas said. “He was the friendliest person around.”

Cardenas said whenever one of their friends were involved in an accident, Dupuis would organize a get-together of friends.

“He was the hub for all us friends — he brought all of us together,” said Eric Weber, 1993 K-State alumnus and Manhattan resident.

Cardenas said motorcyclists miss 12-40 cars a day while riding bikes — especially around campus. People will play with their stereos or will be talking on their phones not paying attention.

“Motorists should be more aware of motorcycles,” Scott Milliken, Manhattan resident, said.

Milliken said Dupuis was the safest person around.

“People need to remember the good times with him. Bike riders should take a lesson from this,” Mike Amur, junior in marketing, said.

Dave Gunther, Manhattan resident, said, “For everybody who rides a bike, wear your fucking helmet.”

Dustin Creek, senior in criminology, said the city of Manhattan needs to put in turning signals.

Reserve a book at Farrell with the click of a mouse

Janet Blanchat
staff reporter

Interlibrary loans from Farrell Library are available on the World Wide Web.

“This is a service for KSU faculty, students and staff,” Cherie Geiser, head of Interlibrary Loan, said.

Geiser said it is only necessary to have access to the Internet to use this service.

“If they are KSU faculty, students and staff and have access to the Internet, they can use this service,” Geiser said.

The service began April 1.

This is a way student can borrow materials from other libraries, Geiser said.

“These are materials that our library already own, and you use the computer rather than on a paper form,” Geiser said.

Interlibrary Loan uses on-line forms that allow users to request materials, which are not owned by KSU Libraries.

Students can borrow books, journals, periodicals, thesis and dissertations using this system.

Users select forms based on what they want to borrow.

Once a form has been selected, the person fills out the appropriate boxes directly on the computer screen.

When the necessary boxes have been completed and the form submitted, the request is sent on to the libraries' Interlibrary Loan Services Unit.

When what you want arrives, you will be notified by either e-mail, phone, U.S. mail or campus mail.

You can pick up your order at Interlibrary Loan Services from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday or at the Farrell Library reserve desk evenings or weekends during library service hours.

If you requested copies, you can get them through campus or U.S. mail.

Geiser said they've been testing the program for two months.

“This new system on the World Wide Web was developed more quickly than we had anticipated, and therefore, we decided to immediately offer this service to our library patrons,” she said.

Geiser thought it would be done by July 1.

Access and information

People who do not have a World Wide Web browser can contact Computing and Network Services consultants at 532-7722 or e-mail (consult@ksu.edu) for instructions on how to get the World Wide Web. For more information, contact Interlibrary Loan Services Unit at 532-7440 or e-mail (ill@ksu.edu).

Ticket price hike hasn't slowed sales to studentsJohn Berggren
staff reporter

Friday will mark the last day students can have football season tickets or basketball season tickets or a combination package of both tacked on to their fee payments in the fall.

Representatives have been sitting outside of the enrollment room in Willard Hall since enrollment began two weeks ago.

Carol Adolph, head of ticket sales, said the option of having the ticket fees added on to tuition fees is nothing new.

“We do it totally as a service to the students,” Adolph said.

“It doesn't really save us any work because we still have to take the proofs of paid tuition and give the students their tickets. It saves a lot of hassle for students paying in the fall who can pay in one amount, instead of two.”

Adolph said last year more than 2,000 tickets were sold at enrollment time. As of Friday, around 1,900 had already been sold. A total of 8,500 season student football tickets were sold overall.

With only three days left, it looks like ticket sales will surpass the mark set last year despite the increase in prices. Last year season football tickets cost $49. This year they have risen to $60. Season basketball tickets will cost $96, and the combination package of both will cost $140.

Freshmen will have the same option to purchase tickets and pay for them at enrollment time when they pre-enroll in the summer.

CHRISTIANITY DEFINED

K-State history professor Robert Linder co-edited the book “Concise Dictionary of Christianity in America,” which has been honored as a 1996 Book Award Winner by Christianity Today magazine. The book is an abbreviated version of the 1,305-page 1990 version that won five awards.

Five years of work and dedication has resulted in a book award for a K-State history professor.

The book, “Concise Dictionary of Christianity in America,” co-edited by Robert Linder, professor of history, has been honored as a 1996 Book Award Winner by Christianity Today magazine.

“The book was a product of about five years of work,” Linder said.

He said he helped to find the 400 contributors and assign them topics as well as edit their work.

“It takes an enormous amount of work to find topics, find writers and edit their works,” Linder said. “Even Ph.D.s need their work edited.”

The book is a concise history of Christianity in the United States since before European settlement with articles ranging in size from a few words to several pages, Linder said.

This book is about one-fourth the size of the 1,305 page 1990 version.

The book was nominated by publishers and judged by Christianity Today's editorial board as one of the best Christian reference books published in 1995.

The book placed 12th in the contest. It was one of 27 awarded from the more than 200 books nominated.

“All I got out of it was a nice wall plaque and a nice write up about it in that particular issue of the magazine,” Linder said.

The book has been deemed useful to students and has been adopted as a textbook for a lot of courses in the history of Christianity in the United States, Linder said.

A textbook store is not the only place the book should be able to be found.

“It should be found in any store that carries religious books,” Linder said.

► ISRAEL PREPARES FOR PEACE TALKS DESPITE ROCKET ATTACKS

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israel cracked open the door to peace talks Monday but sent bombers and gun ships against new targets in Lebanon, rocketing suspected Hezbollah hideouts and sending smoke and flames billowing into the sky above Beirut.

Hezbollah launched more rockets into northern Israel and claimed to have dozens of suicide bombers ready to attack.

"Our human bomb brigade is going to concentrate vengeance on Israel. We'll strike at the United States when it directly intervenes against us," Hezbollah's second-in-command, Sheikh Naim Qassem, said to the Lebanese Broadcasting Corporation in a televised interview.

Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres said his country was prepared to talk peace, but it would not set talks in motion. Truces with Hezbollah that Israel has initiated have proven fragile, he said.

Hamas, the Palestinian group whose suicide bombings have Israel reeling, said it has joined the rocketing of northern Israel from Lebanon. A spokesman called on Hamas activists in the West Bank and Gaza Strip to carry out their missions.

Seven Lebanese civilians were killed and 20 people were wounded in the Israeli attacks Monday, Lebanese police reported. Eight Israelis were slightly wounded by Hezbollah rockets.

► FBI INVENTORY RELEASED

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — FBI agents searching Unabomber suspect Theodore Kaczynski's cabin found addresses of corporate executives, maps of San Francisco, bus schedules, guns and a bottle of anti-depressant medicine, according to an inventory released Monday.

In a filing released in federal court, the FBI also confirmed published reports of three typewriters found in the cabin, as well as several unspecified documents and notes.

None of the documents were identified as the original text of the Unabomber manifesto, the 35,000-word tract published last year.

A source told the Associated Press last week that agents found what appeared to be the original of the diatribe against modern technology.

Kaczynski, 53, was arrested at the cabin near Lincoln two weeks ago and is being held on charges of possessing bomb components. He has not been charged with any of the Unabomber attacks, which killed three people and injured 23.

In its list, the FBI did not specifically link any of the more than 600 items to the Unabomber or his crimes and did not even use the word "Unabomber."

► MARINES REFUSE TO GIVE DNA

HONOLULU (AP) — A court-martial opened Monday for two Marines who refused to give blood samples for a DNA registry designed to help the Pentagon identify servicemen's remains.

The corporals fear the genetic dog tags could be used against them in the future, but they haven't said how. They plan to call as an expert witness the co-author of a study that found that many people with genes linked to certain diseases have been discriminated against by insurance companies, employers and others.

The Pentagon has been collecting DNA samples from service members for three years and has stored more than 1 million specimens.

► CLINTON PROPOSES PEACE TALKS

CHEJU-DO, South Korea (AP) — President Clinton will propose unconditional peace talks between North and South Korea with the United States and China as participants, U.S. officials said.

Until now, the United States has insisted that North and South Korea negotiate directly with each other on a permanent peace accord to the long-unsettled Korean conflict.

North Korea has tried to force the United States into direct negotiations, which would put South Korea into a secondary role. Clinton's initiative is a new diplomatic formula for a peace process.

Some U.S. officials said they believe North Korea staged military incursions into the Demilitarized Zone earlier this month after learning about the initiative.

That way, North Korea could claim the United States was responding to its move, in a form of concession.

► PILL MIGHT BUILD MUSCLE MASS

WASHINGTON (AP) — A dietary supplement developed for use in cattle feed appears to help male athletes build twice as much muscle as exercise alone, Iowa State University scientists reported Monday.

It's too soon to know all the effects of HMB, which the body naturally produces every time a person eats protein. But clinical trials involving large supplements of HMB are generating excitement among fitness buffs. The supplement's distributor even claims to have sold it to some Olympians and professional football players.

"If you take HMB and a bag of potato chips and sit on a couch, you're not going to see any effects," cautioned Iowa State veterinarian Steven Nissen, who presented his research to biologists meeting here Monday.

But combined with exercise, 3 grams of HMB a day — the amount derived if anyone could stand eating 500 grams of meat — helped men develop more muscle and lose more fat, he said.

Library catalog available on-line

■ New system can be accessed by anyone on UNIX

Janet Blanchat
staff reporter

People can access KSU Libraries' new on-line catalog wherever they are. KSU Libraries announced the new program after an 11-week shake-down period, when the new system was available only in Farrell and the branch libraries.

Dave Allen, director of Library Network Services, said anyone can get the on-line catalog.

"Anyone who's connected to the campus network can get access to the public UNIX system," Allen said.

Allen said the shake-down period was used to fix the system.

"Our attention since January has focused on eliminating some initial system bugs and improving its overall performance," Allen said.

Software and hardware upgrades are being made to solve the slow response time problems that occurred in the system's first weeks of operation, Allen said.

"At present, a text-based display is the only interface available for remote users of the system," Allen said.

The display is similar to the libraries' LYNX system, he said.

Allen said another interface will be coming.

"A World Wide Web interface, which supports a graphic display, is being implemented and may be available before the end of spring semester," Allen said.

The libraries' new system is based on what is called client/server computing architecture, Allen said.

LOGGING ON

► For more information about remote access to the new system, including a list of Telnet software packages that work best, it can be found on the libraries' web page at (<http://www.lib.ksu.edu/farrell/remote/htm>).

puting architecture, Allen said.

"The work load is shared by a client computer and a server. When your server has completed your search, it returns the results set to be formatted and displayed by your client computer. Many clients can access the same server simultaneously," Allen said.

The libraries' new system also has several types of displays, depending on the computing platform you're working from, Allen said.

"In Farrell and the branch libraries, you may be using a graphic Windows client at a PC work station or a text based client at an IBM terminal. If you're working from your office or dorm room, you would use a text-based client, or soon, a web based client," Allen said.

The library began implementing its new system in June 1995.

The biggest step in going to the new system was converting the 700,000 record LYNX database into the relational database used by the new system. This was completed in November.

The library began checking books out on the new system in December. The on-line catalog was available in Farrell and the branch libraries in January.

► BOARD OF STUDENT PUBLICATIONS INC.

Board votes to include employee representative

Laurel Novell
staff writer

Employees of Student Publications Inc. will have a voting representative on the Board of Student Publications beginning this fall.

The Board of Student Publications unanimously passed a motion Monday to accept the changes made to the Student Publications bylaws, which includes allowing one student employee of Student Publications Inc. to serve as a full voting member of the Board.

Guest speaker Harry Marsh, former chairman of the Board of Student Publications, said he was concerned with other the recent changes the board had made.

He said bylaw changes, such as making the board chairman a student position and not allowing Student Publications employees on the board, were unwise.

He has taken an active interest in board activities because of the presence of student politicians on the board.

"It's always interesting to watch the foxes guarding the hen house," Marsh said.

"In this country, it's the press that keeps an eye on public officials and politicians," he said. "Elected officials shouldn't set policy for the press."

"In my opinion, the board should change its bylaws to eliminate elected and appointed student officials and candidates for those posts from eligibility to serve," Marsh said.

In old business, the board debated the issue of publishing the Collegian one or twice weekly during the summer.

Ben Clouse, board member and chairman of the Finance Committee, was against publishing twice weekly because of budget concerns.

He asked the board to postpone voting on the issue.

"I'm still voting against it tonight, and I want to tell you why," Clouse said. "I can't believe we don't make money off the Collegian regularly and don't understand how we can possibly make money off the Collegian this summer — much less more money — by doubling our number of issues."

"I think it's ridiculous that we're going to vote to print it twice a week. I don't think we can afford it," Clouse said.

Claudette Riley, summer 1996 editor in chief, expressed the need to make a decision as soon as possible so she can make hiring decisions and inform the summer staff.

Despite the need to decide the issue, the board voted 3-1 to send the issue to the Finance Committee for further examination.

Mike Marlett, editor in chief, informed the board that two individuals had filed requests to be informed of board meeting times and were still not being notified of meeting times.

"Is this more Open Meetings Act crap?" Clouse said.

"I'm afraid it is," Marlett said.

The decision was made to add those who requested to be informed to the e-mail list of people to be notified.

Preparation pays off for debater

Rick Druse
staff reporter

The sharp wit and practice of the K-State debate team led one member to be named the No. 2 debater in the nation.

Brent Siemers, senior in economics, was named to the all-American debate team by the Cross Examination Debate Association at the national championship tournament in Los Angeles in late March.

"I think it just reflects the attitude of people in CEDA," Siemers said.

"People have to make a contribution to their team," he said.

He said he was happy to receive the award, but at the time, it was not exciting because the award was presented after K-State was eliminated in the competition.

Siemers said after the disappointment of the loss, he came to appreciate the honor and recognition the award meant.

Siemers said he had spent at least 30 hours a week preparing himself for debate competitions.

He participated in 20 events this year and devoted a great deal of his time to prepare his research and debates for the competitions.

"It's just nice when you get recognition and too bad for those who put in the time and didn't get an award," Siemers said.

Siemers plans to continue his education in graduate school and become an assistant coach for a debate team while in school.

"The recognition might pay off somewhere down the line," Siemers said.

Although K-State did not claim the national champion crown, it had four teams that won seedings among the top 70 teams of the nation.

Courtney Knappe, junior in speech, and Lori Davis, sophomore in speech, posted a 6-2 record, the best for K-State in the tournament.

Ronald Albright, sophomore in philosophy, and Kelly Ross, junior in political science, reached elimination rounds with a 5-3 record.

Alan Hamilton, sophomore in electrical engineering, and Chad Brockman, sophomore in philosophy, reached the elimination rounds.

Siemers and Isaac West, sophomore in pre-law, reached the elimination rounds.

Jesus Christ was a real man. He lived nearly two thousand years ago. His life, ministry, death and resurrection are well documented in history. He gave sight to the blind, he walked on water, he raised the dead, and he taught the common people. His life was full of miraculous happenings. It is said, "He was the kindest man who ever lived." Today, some say he was only a good teacher, but he said he was God. If he is not God, then he is not a good teacher. He was either a liar or a gifted madman. His disciples gave their lives for the sake of spreading his message. They were the first hand witnesses, and they were convinced of his claims.

The teaching of Jesus is easy to understand. He said, "Come to me all you who are weary and burdened, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn from me for I am gentle and humble of heart, and you will find rest for your souls." He also said, "I am the way and the truth and the life. No one comes to the Father except through me." Millions of people have, just like you and me through the ages, put their trust in Him as Savior and Lord. Have all of those people been fooled? Have people believed in Jesus as their Savior in vain? Or is he, "the Christ, the Son of the living God," and "the resurrection and the life," as he said?

Please, seriously consider his claims and investigate the New Testament. Call the phone number available 24 hours during Jesus Week, and talk to someone who believes in Jesus. You could ask them why they believe, or what Jesus has done for them. John 3:16 sums it up so well, God loved the world so much, he gave his one and only son, that if anyone will believe in him, he will not perish, but have everlasting life.

Read the Bible! Start in the New Testament with the Gospel of John. Find out what Jesus said about himself. Find out what he said about you!

Legislature ignores the rights of Kansans

QUICKread

► The Kansas Legislature recently passed a bill that refuses recognition of same-sex marriages. Beyond ethical and legal considerations, the Legislature did this without any public debate or polling of constituent opinion.

It's really too bad citizens of Kansas have little say in the legislative dealings of their state.

The recent signing of a bill concerning the recognition of same-sex marriages is just one example of issues being railroaded through the Kansas Legislature with little or no public input.

There were no open-committee hearings or any chances for public debate on the floor of the Senate about the same-sex issue.

Legislation concerning any issue should represent the opinion of the whole state. This can't be achieved without public discourse and debate. No matter if an issue is controversial or not, the legislators should listen to the opinions of their constituents before rushing through legislation.

Isn't that what representative government means?

Kansas already has a law stating same-sex marriages are illegal, but the new bill seems to be a preemptive strike to stop the political advances of Hawaii, whose Supreme Court ruled a law banning same-sex marriages was unconstitutional.

The Full Faith and Credit Clause of the Constitution prevents marriages from being illegal in different states. This Kansas bill will be a first test of this clause.

Doesn't it seem Kansas is setting itself up for a lawsuit? Same-sex marriages are something many people have strong opinions about, no matter which side of the issue they stand on. It is a waste of taxpayer money to defend the state on an issue that seems destined to lose and may possibly go all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court.

TOLES

Shame, sorrow and remembrance

Today is Yom HaShoah — Holocaust Remembrance Day.

Yom HaShoah is a Hebrew phrase that means "day of the whirlwind" — a reference to the conflagration that swept the ashes of millions of innocent lives up the chimneys of the Nazi death camps from 1938 to 1945. Every year, the 27th day of the Jewish month of Nisan is set aside to remember the greatest horror of the 20th century — the Holocaust — and to reflect on what it means to all of us as human beings.

Yom HaShoah started as a Jewish Day of Remembrance and is on the anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising. But Yom HaShoah is no longer just a day marked by Jews. It is also a day remembered each year by queer communities and by people of good conscience of all faiths.

There is no denying the Nazi killing machine was certainly at its most efficient with Jews. Hitler's "final solution" to the "Jewish problem," and the lessons it teaches us about the inevitable end results of demonizing a minority group — any minority group. Those lessons must never be forgotten.

But let us also not forget the millions of others who were systematically eliminated by the Nazis: homosexuals, Jehovah's witnesses, gypsies, the disabled, the mentally ill, trade unionists, political prisoners and prisoners of war.

Anyone who was deemed undesirable by the German state was eliminated.

Being queer, I feel sorrow and empathy for those millions who were killed, for I know that "there but for chance go I." It is only by accident of birth I was not born a homosexual in Germany at that time. After all, I am of German descent. The Holocaust hits close to home for me. I know with cold certainty, had I been there, I would have been exterminated, as well.

As a European American of German descent, I also feel shame about what my people have done. Even though my family had left Germany long before the first oven was stoked, I cannot help but recognize the Holocaust as part of my ethnic heritage. I know I bear no direct personal culpability in the Holocaust. But the bloodstains of 12 million innocents will forever be on the hands of the German people, and as long as I celebrate my German heritage, I must also accept part of the stigma my ethnicity carries.

For if we are to never forget what was done in the death camps and gas chambers, we must also never forget who it was done by — the German people. People like you and me. People like your neighbors. People like your classmates. The German people were ultimately responsible. No matter if it was the Nazis who pulled the trigger, it was the German people who handed them the gun.

And that gun — anti-Semitism, racism, intolerance, nationalism, heterosexism, hatred and fear — that gun had been in the possession of the German people for a long time. The Holocaust never would have happened if it were not for the attitudes of the German people.

What is even scarier for me is the same gun — or at least a similar one — is in the hands of the American people today. And it is important for us to remember that fact lest we make the same mistake the German people made. We might try to fool ourselves into believing "it could never happen here," but the truth is it most certainly could. For we in this country are no more "righteous," or more "civilized" than the Germans of that time were. Indeed, many people in this country are German.

That is why it is so important we mark Yom HaShoah — so that by remembering the past we will not let it happen again. I burn a candle in my window the night of Yom HaShoah as a reminder of what happened and to honor the memories of those who died. I encourage you to do the same.

Being queer, I also wear a pink triangle to remember those who were forced to wear them in the concentration camps, as a mark of homosexuality. I will not allow their sacrifice to be forgotten either.

Never again.
Never forget.

Sounds of SILENCE on election day

The scene: a table, standing near the lobby wall in the Kramer Dining Center, covered with ballots, pencils and printouts of names.

The cast: a couple staff members sitting behind the table staring into the room, waiting for voters to approach.

The action: a black figure scurries across the floor toward the table.

Is it a voter? Is it a candidate? Is it a desperate campaign worker? No, it is a cricket!

It is a cricket because, sadly, crickets were the only living species that turned out for the 1996 SGA elections last week. It was the worst voter turnout in the past three years.

I, for one, welcome the crickets. I have always supported cricket rights, among squirrel issues, and will continue to do so with as much fervor one man can justify.

We're just lucky Jimmy Jr. did not get that crucial Board of Student Publications vote.

On a down note, however, this will be the last of my cynical, ever-depressing columns about the elections.

So, with tongue-in-cheek, we'll end with a best and worst list of last week's elections:

BEST CAMPAIGN: In a year of cardboard personalities and issues even "A Purple Affair" won't touch, Horsefeathers' and McCracken's bold and witty campaign that just screamed "laugh, baby, laugh!"

We finally got a presidential candidate who is willing to see the lighter side of politics. Their signs, taking firm stances against the bread tax, were augmentations to campus life, not detractors. They even played "Connect Four" with students in the K-State Student Union. If it were 1896, I say they would have darned near won, consarnit!

WORST CAMPAIGN: This little award goes to every candidate who violated the election guidelines and requirements. These are the people who couldn't fill out an expenditure report, didn't make a meeting or filed late. Get a life, folks. This week, let us see if Senate will seat them or kick 'em out on their keisters.

BEST SELL-OUT: Justin Kastner, our student-elected city commissioner, took out a substantial ad in the Collegian and in mass-mailings to support his buddies Hansen and Otto at the expense of using his prestige in office for advancing others' careers. I guess it worked.

We didn't elect you to play political favors with your friends, Commish, but to represent student issues in city government. Now, I guess if we didn't vote for Hansen, you don't represent us? I can already see next year's headlines: "Edith Stunkel announces support of candidate Russell Fortmeyer."

BEST WINNER: Thanks to candidates with election violations, Chris Avila won a one-year seat on Union Governing Board with only four votes.

BEST LOSER: The campus squirrel population, for having its precious environment attacked by drab, uninspired signs and its drinking water poisoned with numerous chalkings.

BEST ISSUE: One student brought up the idea that any presidential candidate with an extra $700 to spend on an election is incapable of representing student interests since they obviously don't know what it is to be a student. I'd hate to think I spent more on a campaign than I did on tuition.

WORST ISSUE: Teacher Evaluations. Please, daddy, make it go away. This issue was passed in 1982, let alone 1996. The fact that every presidential candidate jumped on the T-eval bandwagon is the greatest thing voter apathy has going for it. SGAers-elect: Get inspired or get out!

MOST UNDERHANDED CAMPAIGN TACTIC: Some campaign chalking/graffiti ended up on Waters and Cardwell halls. As if the concrete sidewalks weren't enough, someone was low enough to deface our limestone. Now, I'm really mad.

BEST VICTORY PARTY: The friends and I skipped out early to play with a new Sony Playstation. Hey, when the elections are as lackluster as they were this year, even a little liquor can't beat the companionship an inanimate computer game offers. Technology in 1997!

Seeing the Unabomber in all my classes

Ever since Unabomber suspect Theodore Kaczynski was taken into custody, I haven't looked at my professors in quite the same way.

I'm sure it has something to do with the picture being painted of Kaczynski as a brilliant scholar gone bad, who once taught mathematics for a brief time at the University of Michigan but didn't make much of an impression on anyone.

Now, as I sit in class listening intently to my apparently harmless professors, I'm frequently distracted by the notion that someday one of my professors might turn out to be a serial terrorist. Granted, this idea of mine isn't the most plausible. More than likely, my professors would never bomb anyone or anything, but who's to say? I still have my suspicions.

Of course, I feel obliged to make note of these fears in my teacher evaluations, and I have a number of reasons for doing so. In the best-case scenario, the professor would eventually read my evaluation and wonder which lousy comedian wrote it. Or she might read it, realize someone was on to her and decide to stick to the straight and narrow.

Less desirably, the FBI might someday dig up a copy of my evaluation in the cabin of the professor, and although nobody else would know I had written it, I would have the small satisfaction of telling myself I had tried to do the conscientious and responsible thing all those years ago.

In all seriousness, though, I consider myself a conscientious and responsible person, yet I've written more ridiculous things on teacher evaluations than my suspicion that a given professor could prove to be the next Unabomber. Occasionally, I happen to end up with time on my hands after painstakingly filling in those bubbles, and I can't help myself — I must write something stupid.

Now, come on. You've done it, too. Fess up and evaluate yourself: Your interest in filling out this evaluation? Very high? The amount of fairness you have used? High? Not really.

No doubt, there are students who write honest, constructive evaluations, and no doubt, there are those who do their evaluations in carelessness, humor, malice or in a hurry. Most people probably engage in a little of every behavior, which detracts a little meaning from every evaluation.

The idea of making teacher evaluations public clearly isn't a new one, nor is it clearly a good one. This is not to say that it could never be a good idea. Right now, the publication of teacher evaluations would be something like making public a list of jokes, or a list of faculty/staff

OK, class we're going to SKIP MATH and discuss how ECOLOGICAL problems can be solved by using BOMBS!

we'd most like to burn in effigy. It would be entertaining, and it might help a student to decide what section of a class to enroll in. However, such a list could hardly be called true or fair.

Given last week's pathetic voter turnout, it's difficult to say how the bulk of the student body feels about this issue, but it appears to be popular. Indeed, public-teacher evaluations could become a useful tool if only K-State students would respond by making them worth the trouble.

In other words, if I'm going to call my professor a possible Unabomber, I'd better put on a straight face and take the time to describe, in full, the makings of the bomb.

HELPING

Volunteer service started 10 years ago in Manhattan, still going strong

BILL KRAAI/Collegian

Mental illness isn't catching, but friendship is.

That is just one of the many mottoes of the Compeer Program through Pawnee Mental Health Services Inc.

It is also a motto that expresses thanks to those who volunteer to help out someone who needs a friend.

April 20-27 is National Volunteer week, which is set aside to honor volunteers across the United States.

"We will honor our Compeer volunteers with brunch on April 27 and give them a gift and many thanks for participating in this program," said Mary Alice Schlesener, Compeer coordinator for Pawnee mental health services.

The Compeer Program has been in Kansas for 10 years and was started in Manhattan six years ago through Pawnee Mental Health Services, which is a part of the Community Health Program that was started in the 1960s.

"Compeer is a nationwide program that started in Rochester, New York in the 1970s," Schlesener said.

Schlesener said the idea originated after a lady working in a hospital thought the clients needed something besides professional help. The clients were lonely, and they needed someone other than a social worker or case manager — they needed a friend.

"The Compeer Program is all about friendship," Schlesener said. "We bring volunteers together with community mental health clients for a one-to-one friendship match."

Anyone from the community, male or female, college students to senior citizens, can become Compeer volunteers.

"We do require that our volunteers have a car, sign a contract to volunteer for a year and spend one hour a week with their friend," Schlesener said.

"We also like our volunteers to live in or close to Manhattan over the summer so the match can still meet once a week," she said.

Schlesener said men are matched with men and the women with women, and the program shouldn't cost the volunteers any extra money because their friends want to be treated as equals.

"My friend and I have a lot of fun together," Stacie Friesen, Compeer volunteer, said.

Friesen, junior in psychology, learned about the program when a speaker came to one of her classes to discuss the Compeer program.

Friesen has been a volunteer since last fall and had previously volunteered for the Prairie View Mental Health Center in Newton and thought she had the time and the experience to be a Compeer volunteer.

"My friend and I get together for one hour a week, and we will go to the park, the mall, or we'll go and get a Coke and just talk," Friesen said.

Before a volunteer can be matched to a friend, the clients fill out an application.

Schlesener said the clients choose to have a friend, and their case manager has to give the OK saying the clients are stable and steady on their treatment.

"I enjoy doing things with my Compeer friend because we both have the same interests," said Sharon, client of the Compeer program.

Sharon said they both like walking, country music, reading and sewing.

"A lot of people should become interested in this program — especially college students," Sharon said. "They can learn so much from the people they become friends with."

Schlesener said some people might be hesitant to become a volunteer because there is such a stigma with mental illness.

"All the clients I match with community volunteers are doing well in their treatment plan and have goals they want to meet," Schlesener said.

"These clients want to get back out into the community and do ordinary things," she said.

People interested in becoming Compeer volunteers start by filling out an application and mailing it to Pawnee Mental Health Services.

"We then ask for two recommendations that I will mail off," Schlesener said.

Schlesener then interviews potential volunteers to get to know the person and discusses the National Compeer Program and what will be expected of them as volunteers.

Potential volunteers then sign a release giving Schlesener permission to check with the Department of Motor Vehicles to check for a valid drivers license, and she also checks with the Kansas Children's Abuse Center to check if the potential volunteers name is on the registry.

"After this process, there are two training sessions that total about five hours altogether and are usually done in the evening," Schlesener said.

"We talk about long-term mental illness, the day hospital program through Pawnee Mental Health Services, medication, confidentiality and what to do if there would happen to be a crisis," she said.

Schlesener said there is a 24-hour phone number that volunteers can call if there is a problem.

Matches between volunteers and the clients are done by comparing applications to determine similar interests.

"Not all matches are made in heaven, but we have had some great success stories," Schlesener said.

She said in one match the volunteer made her friend a birthday cake, and it was the first birthday cake the friend had ever received.

"My friend and I do many things together," said Bonnie Nettles, Compeer volunteer and senior in psychology.

Nettles said they go for walks, to church grocery shopping and do things with Nettles' children.

"My friend has even cut my hair a few times," Nettles said.

Nettles has gained more than experience with her involvement with Compeer Program.

"I have learned how to interact with someone who's mentally ill and the issues they encounter," Nettles said. "If you saw my friend on the street, you wouldn't know she was mentally ill."

"People with mental illnesses just want friends like everybody else."

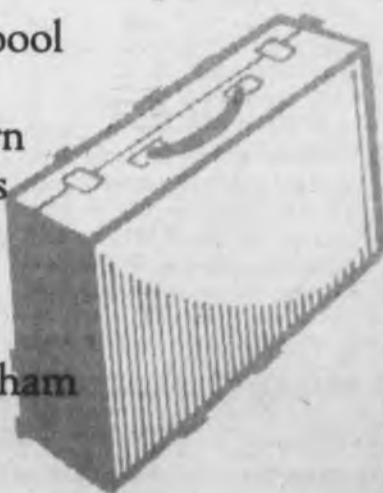

To learn more about the Compeer Program call Pawnee Mental Health Services at 587-4333.

■ K-State basketball coach Tom Asbury has signed 5-foot-11 Duane Davis, a point guard who will be transferring from Arizona State. The Wildcats have also signed Joe Leonard, a 7-foot center from Oakville High School in St. Louis. More information can be found in Wednesday's edition of the Collegian.

► SPRING FOOTBALL

Quality, not numbers, concern Snyder

John Berggren
staff writer

With the losses of Ray Eagle, Tim Colston, Dirk Ochs and Percell Gaskins, one could point to K-State's defensive line and linebacker core as one of the areas in question for the 1996 edition of the Wildcats football team.

Eagle, Colston and Ochs combined for 180 tackles a year ago and 24 of K-State's 38 sacks.

Gaskins was a three-year starter and a third-team all-American last year.

Those stats alone show if K-State wants to make a bid for again owning one of the top defenses in the nation, some big shoes will have to be filled.

As for the defensive line, K-State football coach Bill Snyder said lack of experience was a worry of his.

"I'm not concerned with our defensive line in terms of numbers of players," Snyder said.

"I'm more concerned about the quality of players we have. This spring we are hoping to develop two-deep across the line, and the same is true for the linebacker position."

K-State does however return defensive end Nyle Wiren, who was on the all-Big 8 team his sophomore season.

After battling several injuries a year ago, Wiren was able to tie up eight sacks, make five tackles for losses and cause two fumbles.

Wiren said his role on this year's team has changed being a senior.

"I'm in a leadership role, and it is a little bit different than I'm used to," Wiren said.

"I usually go with the flow, and now I'm like a dad to the younger guys."

"I'm the oldest guy out there, and I'm going to have to play like it — not just for the younger guys, but for myself. It's a goal of mine to get myself better every year."

Wiren said despite the losses from the last year's line the 1996 team has the chance to be just as good.

"There is always somebody else that can step up and is ready to play," Wiren said. "We're in the process now of figuring out exactly who it is that will fill the spots."

"We have a lot of new guys that are playing their hearts out and are doing extremely well."

Possibly figuring into the empty spots will be Thad Swazer and Darren Howard at Ochs' end position.

Brock Stefan, Lance Grace, Andrew Timmons and Jason Hogaboom will take the defensive tackle spots.

With the loss of Gaskins, last year's defensive freshman of the year Travis Ochs said he looked to shoulder more of the leadership load.

"With the loss of a person like Percell, I think most people would want to step up and play a leader role just like he did," Ochs said. "I know for myself I just want to step up and take control."

"Last year's award was nice, but I feel like every year, I've got to make more plays and prove that I'm not a fluke."

K-State also returns three-year letterwinner DeShawn Fogle and Gaskins' back-up from a year ago, Jabbar Williams.

Also figuring into the linebacker position will be Casey Wehrman, Turrell Williams and Joe Bob Clements.

PART FOUR: THE DEFENSIVE LINE
This is the fourth part in a seven-part series. Look for Part Five: The Offensive Line in Thursday's edition of the Collegian.

Ready to rumble?

For all of you NFL junkies out there, this is the weekend you've been waiting for.

Some Wildcats will have some interest in this weekend's festivities, too. Who?

■ Percell Gaskins In the Interactive Internet Sports draft guide, Gaskins is listed as the fifth-best linebacker in the nation according to the combined ratings. Gaskins' speed in the 40-yard dash was 4.65. The main concern with Gaskins is his size for a linebacker. Gaskins is listed in the guide at 5-foot-11, 209 pounds. Despite his size, Gaskins just has too much athletic ability to be overlooked by teams.

■ Mitch Running College Sports magazine has Running listed as one of its top overachievers in this year's draft. With his pair of great hands and his ability to play on special teams, Running is bound to make someone's roster. In a workout, Running ran a 4.5 in the 40-yard dash.

■ Tim Colston Colston earned first-team all-American status last year with the Cats. The knock on Colston in draft guides has been his lack of size for an NFL interior lineman. Colston has overcome obstacles all his life. I look for him to clear this one and find a home in the NFL.

Come draft day, here are the top 10 names you should hear called.

1. Jets They have been on the clock for awhile. Are they going to keep the pick or trade down? I look for them to keep the pick and take wide receiver Keyshawn Johnson.

They picked up Neil O'Donnell and Jeff Graham in the offseason, so Johnson would be the perfect fit. Although, the Jets might continue drafting the same as in previous years. Don't be surprised if they take another tight end.

2. Jaguars If Johnson slips down to them, they will take him. But that's probably not going to happen. Look for the Jaguars to improve their defense with linebacker Kevin Hardy.

3. Cardinals Offensive lineman Jon Ogden will be there. But the Cardinals picked up Lomas Brown in the offseason, so that's not a big area of need.

The Cardinals are rumored to have running back Garrison Hearst on the trading blocks. Lawrence Phillips is too good to pass up — the Cards will take him.

4. Baltimore Although the Ravens could need a running back, Ogden is too good to pass up.

5. Giants They have a desperate need for a long-ball threat at wide receiver. Look for them to take Terry Glenn out of Ohio State.

6. Rams Jerome Bettis is not going to cut it at running back. The Rams will take Leland McElroy from Texas A&M. He's impressed everyone in workouts.

7. Patriots Their defense was ranked 28th in the league last year, 25th against the pass. Defensive end Simeon Rice from Illinois is the answer.

8. Panthers Twentieth in the league defensively last season, the Panthers will look at Baylor defensive lineman Daryl Gardener for the answer.

9. Oilers Look for the Oilers to take a gamble on a big play receiver here. They are looking at taking wide receiver Eric Moulds from Mississippi State.

10. Bengals The Bengals need some help in protecting their All-Pro quarterback Jeff Blake. The best offensive lineman available is Willie Anderson from Auburn.

Don't agree? E-mail your choices for the draft to Shana at (shanem@ksu.ksu.edu).

Comeback in Manhattan

Hampered by shoulder soreness, Dinah Watson missed most of the spring season. Since her return, she has won 6-straight matches

contributing writer

Her home is Scarborough, England, but sophomore Dinah Watson is glad to be at her second home in Manhattan.

"This is a chance of a lifetime," Watson said.

Watson said finding a good education in England is hard.

"K-State offered a good quality education and a scholarship to go with it," she said. "That's hard to find in England."

Watson said she went to a club that sent profiles of players to universities. That's when she was introduced to Coach Steve Bietau. Watson said she was impressed with Bietau and the program at K-State.

Watson said once she got here, she found out practice was different than at home.

"Here, there are lots of players for me to play with, and matches are arranged for me to practice," she said. "It's terrific. Back home, it's hard to find players to practice with."

One can tell by Watson's performances on the court that she's been able to get enough practice.

Last season, Watson put up a good year, finishing the season at 6-6 in singles action.

This season has been a different story, though.

Yes, K-State has two players ranked in the ITA rankings in sophomore Yana Dorodnova and senior Karina Kuregian. And Kuregian is a perfect 12-0 on the season. But quietly, Watson has put a terrific season together.

Had it not been for a shoulder injury, Watson might have been undefeated, also.

After the holiday break, Watson started noticing pain in her shoulder. She said she was unsure of whether it was due to a lot of practice or training in the weight room.

One thing was for sure — it was affecting her play in her first two matches.

"In the first match, I couldn't even serve overhand," Watson said. "I was serving underhand the whole match."

In the second match, Watson's speed on her serve was much slower. Due to the shoulder problem, Watson started off the year 0-2.

After a break from play and practice, the soreness was mostly gone, and the Watson of old had returned. Since her 0-2 start, Watson has been on a tear. She has won her last six singles matches. Most of her wins have been in straight sets.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Dinah Watson returns a serve against an Iowa State tennis player during doubles matches earlier this season at Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"I don't really try to think about how many matches I've won," Watson said. "I just try to go into every match thinking that I can win it, but I am feeling good about my play."

Watson isn't the only one who is feeling good about her play.

"Dinah is playing terrific," Bietau said. "She's playing very consistent, and she's been mentally tough. But that's what we expect out of Dinah."

Playing at the No. 5 spot in singles, Watson has been serving up the victories left and right.

Last week against the No. 18 Kansas Jayhawks, Watson cruised to a 6-1, 6-2 victory. On Saturday against Colorado, Watson was pushed to a three-set match. After winning the first, Watson dropped the second set. She regained her composure in the third and pulled out the win, 6-3.

Getting into third-set matches is something Watson would like to improve on.

"Sometimes I win easily in the first, then have a letdown in the second," she said.

"I need to continue mixing my game up in that second set."

One letdown Watson isn't planning to have is with her goals.

"I want to win my flight in the Big 8 Tournament," she said. "And I would really love to see the team make it to regionals and nationals."

► TRACK AND FIELD

Tracksters come up short

Trevor Grimm
staff writer

The warm weather forecast for last weekend was supposed to aid track athletes from K-State and other colleges at the 11th Annual K.T. Woodman Centennial Track Classic in Wichita.

And for the first part of Saturday's meet, the weather held. But athletes said windy weather later in the day ended up playing a big factor in the meet, which featured several colleges from Kansas and no team scores.

"This weekend, half of the meet was OK. The other half had bad weather (because) it was windy," senior distance runner Irma Betancourt said.

Early season meets can often be the site of inclement weather, which can have a significant effect on performances.

"I think at the first meet, the weather was kind of bad. I think we didn't have a good meet because of the weather. At the second meet in Texas, we had good weather, and we trained all week in Texas. Even though we were tired from the week of training, I think we did pretty good."

In the Wichita meet, Vanita Kinard and Renetta Seiler both picked up first-place finishes and meet records in their respective events. Kinard captured the triple jump with a distance of 40-10.50, while Seiler took the discus competition with a distance of 158-5.

Betancourt topped the list of other first place K-State finishers with a time of 4:34.48 in the 1,500-meter run. Other first-place finishes on the women's side went to the 4x100 meter relay team, which won with a time of 46.15, seconds and the 4x400 meter relay team, which captured its event with a time of 3:51.61.

On the men's side, K-State picked up four first-place finishes. Travis Livingston captured the 110-meter hurdles with a time of 14.26 seconds, Jeff Martin won the 400-meter hurdles with a time of 53.53 seconds, Scott Galas picked up the 800-meter run with a time of 1:51.45, and the 4x400-meter relay team captured its event with a time of 3:14.68.

"I thought everybody did well," Betancourt said. "I think they are improving a lot."

Coach Cliff Rovelto said he was pleased with the performance of Marshall Grayson, who placed third with a distance of 24-1 in the long jump, and Gene Peterson, who placed fourth in the shot put, fifth in the discus and fifth in the hammer throw.

"He (Grayson) had a personal record in the long jump," Rovelto said. "That's kind of a breakthrough for him."

"Gene Peterson, I thought, had a pretty good day. He threw well in all the events."

► BASEBALL

Wildcats' sluggers look to end slump

Trevor Grimm
staff writer

Going into this week's two-game series at Missouri, K-State baseball fans might not know what to expect.

A glance at the box score of Friday's game between K-State and Nebraska would indicate the up-again, down-again Wildcats were back on the right track.

But the Wildcats followed up Friday's 19-6 win with a 14-4 loss Saturday, continuing their trend of inconsistency.

As a result, K-State fans are left to wonder which Cats will show up Tuesday and Wednesday in Columbia.

One thing is for sure — it will take a strong effort to unseat the first-place Tigers.

"They swung the bats real good in the first series," K-State coach Mike Clark said.

"We're going to have to do a better job of pitching against them than what we did in our ballpark."

K-State (20-15 overall, 4-8 conference) might find added incentive from the season's previous match up between the two teams.

The Cats dropped two of three games on their home field, losing to Missouri 12-5 in the opener and 10-2 in the second game before picking up a 5-2 win in game three.

But it is Mizzou's 26-11, 9-4 record and first-place standing that should be the main motivating factor, Clark said.

"I'd hope that we'd be excited about playing them, because they're in first place," Clark said.

Since the first Missouri series, K-State has lost three of four games, all coming at the hands of the Cornhuskers.

K-State is led offensively by the trio of shortstop Heath Schesser, second baseman Scott Poepard and third baseman Todd Fereday. Schesser has a .346 average and has 35 RBI. Poepard is hitting .342 with 39 RBI, and Fereday has a .338 average and has driven in 35 runs.

David Hendrix leads K-State with eight home runs.

In conference play, however, K-State has found its offense from different sources.

Jason Bichelmeier and Ryan Buell are both hitting .414 in conference play, while Poepard has struggled. Poepard is hitting just .235 in 12 conference games.

Missouri is led offensively by outfielder Ryan Fry, who is hitting .403 in all games and .426 in conference games.

Fry also has 47 RBI and four home runs this season.

Outfielder Matt Nivens is hitting .387 with a team-high seven home runs on the season, including a .415 average in 13 conference games.

Tuesday's pitching matchup will pit K-State's Matt Koeman against Missouri's Jay Bell.

Koeman is 4-3 for the season with a 4.32 ERA, while Bell is 4-2 with a 5.76 ERA.

Chris Traylor (4-0, 2.97 ERA) will throw for the Cats Wednesday, while Missouri has not yet decided.

Game time both nights is 7 at Missouri's Simmons Field.

BLOODLINES

The World Wide Web is expanding at an ever-increasing rate. The web has expanded into every corner of our beings, including music. This week we look into music services.

Many who work with computers shudder at the thought of having a computer tell them what to do in their free time and firefly has come up with a cool way of picking movies and music on the Internet.

After entering some basic data about themselves. (REAL basic, it doesn't even ask your real name.) Users then are presented lists of artists or movies and asked to rank them from one to seven. Now based on the answers, firefly will begin the processes of figuring out the person's favorites. So if the user doesn't recognize, the movie "American Graffiti," for example; they can find out the plot, the players, director, music, or what other shows the actors were in. The average rating for the movie is also shown.

According to my sources, firefly is trying to ink a deal with real-world (opposed to cyberspace) retailers. Users could log into firefly while shopping for compact disc's or when renting videos. Look for firefly at a store near you.

Ticketmaster Online

(<http://www.ticketmaster.com/>)

For a good corporate page, look at Ticketmaster. It has found the secret of good pages: Entertain your audience. That is what it has done.

The Ticketmaster homepage not only provides a concert calendar for the shows it promotes, it also gives interviews, the latest music news and even a chat line. It also has its own on-line magazine available here.

This is a useful page trying to catch an artist on a road trip or at least looking at what will be in the area. You'll find the touring schedule for nearly every band except Pearl Jam here.

Though it's good for a commercial page, it does have a lot of problems. Everything will be graphical on a page or no graphics at all gets annoying. When they do add graphics, sometimes it seems the authors of this page think you have the 10 minutes it takes to view all of the pictures. My other gripe is there is no on-line ordering! The page might have its problems, but is worth visiting.

Bird House Productions

(<http://www.flinthills.com/~arts/birdhouse.htm>)

While talking about music homepages, I must mention the people who are trying to add a little color to our drab, dreary lives: Bird House Productions. Though the page is not the best, it does download quickly and reminds us that content is everything on the Internet.

Music lovers will enjoy seeing the acoustic performances that Bird House is bringing into Manhattan. The page also gives links to the artists' homepages to help surfers get a feel for the music.

Word of the Week: CD ROM

Contrary to popular belief, these aren't only meant to play music while typing a paper. CD ROM's have revolutionized how software is distributed, companies like Microsoft no longer send them in installation software.

Lecturer addresses memory research

Brett Mast
staff writer

Flashbulb memories, memory repression and the validity of the theories behind them were the focus of a speech Monday.

Charles Weaver, professor of psychology at Baylor University, discussed how his research on what psychologists call flashbulb memories relates to the idea of memory repression.

Flashbulb memories are strong recollections that include where a person was, what they were doing and how they felt when a significant or traumatic event took place, Weaver said.

Memories that are repressed are not accessible for a long period of time and are finally remembered through therapy or some other mechanism.

"It is unlikely that complex behaviors in adults can be traced back to these very simple explanations as a kid," Weaver said.

Much of Weaver's time was spent discussing whether these types of memories require a special mechanism or brain function to occur.

"If repression exists, it has to be the product of a special mechanism," Weaver said. "All I am trying to show is that everywhere else we have looked under circumstances that share almost the same parameters, it is not there."

Weaver explained his reasons for questioning the usefulness of repressed-memory therapy by citing a five-year, retrospective study performed by the Victims Assistant Fund in the state of Washington.

The study compares data from 30 women who said to have always had memories of their abuse to 30 who allegedly retrieved memories of abuse.

Of the women who experienced repressed memories of abuse, more than half were later divorced, a significant number of them attempted suicide, and not one remained employed, Weaver said.

Of the women who claimed they had always remembered the abuse, there were no reported suicide attempts, and the statistics in many of the other categories were also lower, Weaver said.

Weaver expressed his concern about therapy that includes measures such as hypnotism to retrieve memories that may or may not be accurate.

"I have heard it said that in a therapeutic setting, what is important is what is remembered, not what really happened," Weaver said. "I don't know how true that is in cases when what is believed to happen extends into allegations toward others."

There are also doubts when it comes to the whether this therapy actually helps people, he said.

"I don't think we are doing folks a good service by doing this," Weaver said.

"It is predicated on bad science, and it is predicated on things we can't verify."

UPC OFFERS ENTERTAINMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Phil Kellum
staff reporter

Every week, students can catch various types of entertainment in Union Station.

Union Program Council's Eclectic Committee is responsible for bringing much of that entertainment to campus.

"The committee decides what kind of music they want. They decided to do acoustic at the end of the year," John Sandlin, program advisor, said.

Every Thursday in April, an acoustic performance takes place in Union Station.

"Due to budgetary constraints, it was much cheaper to do four individual programs instead of just one," Sandlin said.

The current programs were chosen last semester, because they must be picked and booked the semester before they are to take place.

There are several ways that performers are brought to UPC's attention.

"One way is we are a member of NACA, National Association

"They use stealth tactics like shutting down public input or discussion because they don't want dialogue," Taylor said.

"They believe that everyone either does or should support their non-inclusive agenda."

However, Eric Aggson, senior in elementary education, said although he didn't believe in laws forbidding such marriages, he would have concerns about same-sex marriages.

"What if the couple wanted to raise a child?" Aggson said.

"I think it would be hard on a child to grow up in a situation like that," he said.

The passage of the anti-marriage bill is almost insignificant when you consider the plans of such ultra-conservatives for the future, Taylor said.

"Next year expect legislation attacking welfare mothers, minorities, problem children and children who are in state care," Taylor said. "Kansans who don't support these groups' views should strongly consider voting these people out in this year's election."

Kansas joins South Dakota, Idaho, Georgia and Utah as states that have passed similar legislation.

respecting bikes."

Weber said Dupuis will always be a special person to all those who knew him.

Originally from Myrtle Point, Ore., Dupuis got out of the U.S. Army at Fort Riley in November 1993.

Dupuis was employed at Brooks Yamaha in Manhattan.

This year, the comedy performances have gone well. This spring, Sandlin said there have been three packed houses for the three comedians.

"This spring, we ran out of seating

They try to bring in both regional and national acts to perform. Two of the four acoustic performances this month are local, Jeff Barrett and the Blueberry Monsters.

"Most of the time, they come from all over," Sandlin said.

The overwhelming majority of shows have done rather well, Sandlin

"Teresa did well. Comedy has just gone through the roof. We try to reflect the different needs, preferences and tastes of the student body. I think we've done a good job this year," he said.

Runaway performs at 8 p.m. Thursday in Union Station, and Jeff Barrett will play at 8 p.m. April 25 in Union Station.

Anniversary unnerves employees

OKLAHOMA CITY

BOMBING

Associated Press

U.S. Marshal Rand Rock says his offices in Topeka will operate as usual on Friday, the anniversary of the Oklahoma City bombing.

But he knows some federal workers are a little nervous about April 19. Rock was in charge when bombing suspect Terry Nichols was taken into custody in Kansas a year ago.

"I guess some people are nervous, and that's a shame that people have to be nervous about things like that," he said.

Federal officials across Kansas were planning a day of work like any other Friday, but they admit that the April 19 date could keep some federal employees away from the office.

Hattie Thomas, spokeswoman for Environmental Protection Agency in Kansas City, Kan., said the employees were being reminded to take extra precautions on Friday. She didn't know if more people than usual were taking the day off, but she said the agency was trying to fill any requests for days off.

"The agency is being, I think, very understanding," she said.

The General Services Administration, which oversees operations of all federal buildings, has beefed up security across the nation since the bombing.

Bond Faulwell, deputy regional administrator for the administration's

Heartland region, said Tuesday about $19.5 million in extra security measures had been implemented in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska. That includes more security guards, perimeter security measures, barricades, cameras, metal detectors and intrusion alarms. He also said many visitors must check in with officials before entering the building and some must be escorted at all times.

The EPA and Housing and Urban Development are among the federal agencies with offices in Kansas City, Kan. Topeka's federal building includes a U.S. Courthouse and offices for the Coast Guard. Wichita also has a U.S. Courthouse.

Faulwell said all federal agencies planned a period of silence at 9:02 a.m. Friday to remember the exact moment a bomb ripped through the Oklahoma City federal building one year ago, killing 168 people.

"We recognize the significance of April 19," Faulwell said.

He said no special security measures were planned for federal buildings in Kansas.

"With the security we have, federal buildings are extremely secure," he said.

Sgt. Terry Maple said the Capitol Police, which patrols the Statehouse and other state-owned property in Topeka, will be in a state of height-

► UNABOMBER SUSPECT

Lawyer says Kaczynski's
trial is tainted

Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. — Theodore Kaczynski's lawyer asked a judge to block the prosecution of the Unabomber suspect, saying Tuesday that government leaks have jeopardized his chances for a fair trial.

Michael Donahoe said the release of information from unidentified federal sources demonstrates a lynch-mob mentality on the part of federal investigators.

The result was a lethal media blitz that poisoned the entire population of grand jurors within the United States against Kaczynski, he wrote in his motion.

Donahoe, one of two court-appointed attorneys for Kaczynski, said the prosecution should be halted until the court can decide whether the leaks will prevent a fair trial.

"The government should not be allowed to proceed before various grand juries throughout the country that have been permanently poisoned by the government's outrageous conduct in disclosing to the media the highly incriminating nature of evidence taken from Kaczynski's cabin," Donahoe said.

"In Mr. Kaczynski's case, the possibility that he could ever be afforded anything that might remotely resemble that (fair trial) process has been forever lost."

U.S. District Judge Charles Lovell did not immediately rule on Donahoe's petition, which sought a delay in any grand jury proceedings against Kaczynski.

A federal grand jury will hold its regularly scheduled meeting Wednesday in Great Falls and is expected to hear evidence against Kaczynski. The lone charge filed against him thus far makes no mention of the Unabomber attacks that killed three people and injured 23 over the past 18 years.

Lovell scheduled a hearing for 3:30 p.m. Friday to consider whether to pursue Donahoe's motion by calling witnesses and told both sides to prepare written briefs.

Kaczynski, 53, was arrested April 3 after federal agents, tipped off by his suspicious brother, began searching his mountain cabin near Lincoln.

Leaks about the case began appearing as soon as a search of Kaczynski's home began April 3. Most claimed that evidence collected there tied Kaczynski to the Unabomber bombings.

Donahoe's motion also requested a hearing to question Justice Department officials about what they have done to prevent leaks. He also asked Lovell to dismiss a charge of possessing bomb-making materials, and requested the return of hundreds of items taken in a search of Kaczynski's cabin.

Should the government contend it is not responsible for the leaks, Donahoe said he will put reporters on the stand and ask them to identify their confidential sources.

"If past practice is an indicator, the effort will be a futile one," said Dick Winfield, who has practiced media law in New York for 30 years.

City commission discusses to cooperate with transportation company

Chris Oakley

staff writer

City commissioners voted 4-0 to work with Travelers Express Inc. to negotiate an agreement that may result in a city-wide public transportation system.

John Furney, president of Travelers Express, presented commissioners with a proposal that would create three fixed routes for public transportation in the city.

His proposal asks for a loan of $161,600 from the city.

In last year's capital improvements program, commissioners included $150,000 to be used over three years toward public transportation.

Furney said he would negotiate with the city concerning the amount of the loan that would stay within the city's budget.

Glen Nelson, director of the Riley County Aging Transportation Agency, also presented a proposal to commissioners for a $20,000 grant to be used to purchase a wheelchair accessible mini-van.

"We are non-profit. We depend upon public funds," he said.

He said the ATA, which receives county funds, would continue to operate if it did not receive the grant.

The ATA offers a variable route system in which riders can call to request a ride anywhere in Riley County.

"I think the essential mobility of Manhattan citizens is not something we could guarantee without the fixed route system," Commissioner Edith Stunkel said.

Commissioner Steve Hall suggested to Furney that he work with Nelson in creating a system that adheres to the American with Disabilities Act.

The act states a public transportation system must have an alternative means of travel or be accessible to the disabled.

Furney said he plans to begin operation July 1.

He said the route would operate from 6 a.m. until 6 p.m. on Monday through Fridays. Fare would be 50 cents per trip.

Furney said he plans on purchasing 70 benches to be used for stops ► Police pulled over Topeka resident Scott Roeder for a traffic violation, then found he was listed as a member of the Montana Freeman.

Bill Bontempo

staff writer

At noon Tuesday, Shawnee County Police discovered an explosive device and a member of the Montana Freeman Organization during an arrest for a traffic violation.

Scott Roeder, Topeka, was pulled over at the intersection 42nd Street and Martin Drive in Topeka by Shawnee County Police for driving a vehicle with an illegal license plate.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation list of Montana Freeman members includes Roeder's name.

Further investigation of the vehicle found that Roeder was driving an unregistered vehicle without a drivers license or automobile insurance.

During a routine inventory of the vehicle, police discovered a blasting cap device.

After moving the vehicle to Forbes Field for further investigation, a nine-volt battery wired to a bomb-like booby-trap device was found along with a 1 pound can of gun powder.

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms discovered the device, but Shawnee County Sheriff Dave Meneley said it was a poor attempt at a triggering device for a bomb.

With permission from Roeder, the apartment he lived in with his father was searched, but no contraband was found.

Meneley said Roeder will be charged with the traffic violations in addition to transporting explosive devices.

► ISRAELIS BOMBARD PALESTINIAN REFUGEE CAMP, KILL 2-YEAR-OLD

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli helicopter gunships targeted Lebanon's largest Palestinian refugee camp Tuesday, widening their 6-day-old onslaught against Iranian-backed guerrillas. Israeli aircraft also bombed Beirut, killing a 2-year-old girl, after a rocket attack on northern Israel. Despite a flurry of diplomatic activity involving the United States, France and other countries, there was no sign of a letup in Israel's offensive aimed at stopping the rocket attacks by Hezbollah guerrillas.

From hideouts in the valleys of south Lebanon, the guerrillas fired more volleys of Katyusha rockets into northern Israel, drawing more Israeli airstrikes.

Five civilians, including the 2-year-old girl, were killed and 20 wounded on Tuesday.

All told, 46 people have been killed — including three Hezbollah guerrillas — and 166 wounded on both sides since the hostilities began Thursday.

► FEDERAL WORKERS FIGHT FEAR

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government has spent $100 million to improve security at federal office buildings since last year's deadly bombing in Oklahoma City, but as Friday's anniversary nears some officials suggest human powers of observation may be the best defense.

"I'll remind everyone the day before to be especially cautious in case somebody wants to commemorate the occasion by trying something similar," said Robert Gard, supervising deputy of the U.S. Marshals Service in Norfolk, Va.

Friday is also the anniversary of the fiery end of the Branch Davidian standoff at Waco, Texas.

"We remind all of our employees that this is an anniversary that can prompt hostile actions by persons antagonistic to the federal government," said Richard Haynes, special agent in charge of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms office in Houston.

In the days after the bombing, the General Services Administration was criticized for not having enough uniformed officers at federal buildings outside of Washington and for security lapses in nearly every region of the country.

The agency, with the help of a Justice Department review, moved quickly to shore up security and rehabilitate its image.

NEW YORK (AP) — Imagine life as Madonna's wee one. Cone-shaped baby bottles? Baby togs by Jean-Paul Gaultier? X-rated first words?

We'll see, since the Material Girl has gone Maternal. Madonna is expecting her first child in November.

"She is pregnant," her publicist Liz Rosenberg said Tuesday in a telephone interview from Budapest, Hungary, where Madonna, 37, is filming the movie version of the musical "Evita."

The father is Carlos Leon, Madonna's 29-year-old personal trainer-boyfriend.

Rosenberg said Madonna is a few months pregnant but doesn't look it. And she hasn't really suffered from typical first-trimester symptoms, like throwing up at the sight or smell of just about anything.

She does, however, have that well-known maternal glow.

► LIBERIAN WAR TRAPS CITIZENS

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — The plight of 10,000 people trapped in a barracks that were sought out as a safe haven from Liberia's civil war grew more desperate Tuesday under a fresh attack from one of the rival factions.

From dozens of refugees who fled the buildings amid the new fighting came reports many of those still inside are dying of cholera and food and water are becoming scarce.

Firing mortar shells and truck-mounted artillery, forces loyal to Charles Taylor advanced to about 200 yards from the barracks where fighters loyal to rival rebel leader Roosevelt Johnson were holding hostages as human shields.

Thousands of others sought refuge there from the violence that has convulsed Monrovia.

Fighters inside the barracks returned fire and appeared to have repelled the attack as shooting subsided. At least five Liberian refugees were killed and one critically injured in the fighting, according to journalists inside the compound.

► ANDREW, FERGIE SEEK DIVORCE

LONDON (AP) — Prince Andrew and his flighty Fergie are divorcing, long after the British public itself fell out of love with the flamboyant duchess.

Tuesday's announcement that the divorce was already well under way was discretion itself compared with the years of high-profile antics that preceded it — most notably the former Sarah Ferguson's topless cavorting with another man, caught by a photographer in the act of sucking the duchess' royal toes.

In a tersely worded statement through their lawyers, the Duke and Duchess of York said simply that they have agreed, after more than two years' separation, that their marriage should be formally ended.

The 36-year-old duchess would give up the title of Her Royal Highness and keep the children, Princess Beatrice, 7, and Princess Eugenie, 6, the statement said.

There were no details about money. She will remain the Duchess of York, a status she received when she married and entered the royal family to become its most reviled member. The divorce is expected to become final next month.

► COMPETITION

Math team places first in Big 8

L.L. Livengood

K-State's Putnam math team placed first among the Big 8 conference schools in the 1995 William Lowell Putnam mathematical competition.

"The exam detects very high, very good mathematical talent," said Tom Muenzenberger, K-State Putnam team coach and director of K-State undergraduate studies in math.

The team consisted of Eric Farmer, senior in mathematics and computer science; Jeremiah Goertz, senior in mathematics and computer science; and Daniel Lee, senior in mathematics.

Team members were chosen by five coaches on the basis of the Putnam seminar and performance on prior exams, Muenzenberger said.

"There's a lot of luck involved in choosing team members," Muenzenberger said.

The names of the lucky ones chosen must be turned in one month before the December exam.

Farmer said he began taking the exam as part of a stipulation on the Kenneth and Maria Rector scholarship.

Farmer completed his fourth exam this December and said he anticipates taking it again next year.

"I'll probably be taking it next year, too, just because it's something I enjoy doing," Farmer said.

Farmer said his test cannot be sent in to be graded because the Putnam committee stipulates students can only compete for four years.

"I'll essentially be taking it for fun — if you can call a six-hour exam fun," Farmer said.

The exam was administered to 20 K-State students by Muenzenberger beginning at 9 a.m. the first Saturday in December.

The exam consisted of two, three-hour segments of six questions each. Each question is worth a maximum of 10 points.

This year the highest score in the country was 85, Muenzenberger said.

Prior to the exam, students can attend a class in the fall where several math professors give problems to the students for the students to work out. The professors validate if the work is correct.

"It takes an intricate solution to get the full credit, and that's what the class focus is on," Mark Berger, senior in mathematics, said.

Berger has participated in the exam for the past four years.

This year he got four of the 12 questions correct. In the past, he only got one correct.

"When I left the test this year, I felt really good," Berger said.

Each year the test continues to be a challenge to students despite their past experience.

"My performance based on my ranking has improved each year, but I can't say it's gotten easier," Farmer said.

Putnam team member Goertz, placed 170th out of 2,468 students in the competition and among the top three students of the Big 8 conference schools making him winner of the Fung's Putnam Achievement Award.

This is a cash award donated by the Fung family to honor their son, Francis Fung, who had four problems correct on the 1991 Putnam exam, Muenzenberger said.

"It's an extremely difficult exam, but students enjoy the competition," Muenzenberger said. "We have students who can solve very difficult mathematical problems and do well at competition."

City to open bridge

QUICKread

► City officials expect the new Kansas River Bridge, which is near completion, to be an important gateway into Manhattan.

Chris Oakley
staff writer

A ceremony marking the upcoming completion of the K-18/K-177 Kansas River Bridge will be at 10 a.m. today.

E. Dean Carlson, Secretary of Kansas Department of Transportation, David Geiger, Federal Highway Division Administrator, and Mayor Sydney Carlin will speak at the ceremony, which will take place at the bridge.

Representatives of the Jensen Construction Co., the contractor of the $7-million bridge, will also be at the ceremony.

Carlin said the bridge has been a long-term project for the city.

"I've specially invited all the commissioners who had a hand in the process of developing this project. It's been years in the making," she said.

Bruce McCallum, director of public works, said the bridge is almost completed.

"I would say it's about 96-plus percent finished. I don't know when it will be completely done," he said.

McCallum said the bridge has been used for about the last two weeks.

Commissioner Justin Kastner said the bridge will be an economic advantage for the community.

"It's going to be a major traffic way into the city," he said.

"It's just a great economic development tool that we want in the state," Kastner said.

"This whole process started back in 1989. So while we are going to be there dedicating it tomorrow, we certainly can't take all the credit," he said.

Carlin said the bridge is a main reason for Manhattan's growth.

"We didn't grow without the last one. It just opened up a new door for us," she said.

"It is going to be a tremendous asset to the visual entrance into Manhattan," she said.

"We're going to look like a really modern city."

Carlin said she believes the commission needs to look into improving the west approach to the bridge.

"The county's doing a wonderful job on their side of the bridge. I'm very concerned about what happens when we get on into town," she said.

Jazz band plays every week for local crowd

Feet were tapping, fingers drumming and heads bobbing to the jazz jives slicing through the smoke-filled air at Auntie Mae's Parlor.

The talent of a pianist, drummer, trumpeter, bass player and saxophonist all combined to produce the sound of the jazz band Wasted Potential that plays every Wednesday night.

The talent of the local saxophonist has caught the ear of Wednesday night patrons of Auntie Mae's, but he is quick to stand back and let the limelight be spread to other members of the band.

Lucas Munce, senior in geography, was first recognized by the International Association of Jazz Educators in 1991 when he chosen as a national young talent winner.

Munce said he submitted a tape to the selection committee and was chosen one of three runners-up to the two winners.

"I was aware of Lucas' playing and accomplishments since back in his high school years," said Bill McFarlin, member of International Association of Jazz Educators and pianist for the band.

Munce began playing in the fifth grade public school band in Manhattan.

"My dad always listened to records," Munce said. "He had billions of them, so access to good music was always available."

Munce's playing is often praised by his peers.

"In my opinion, he is a world-class jazz saxophonist influenced by perhaps a number of artists, including Paul Desmond, Charlie Parker and Phil Woods," McFarlin said. "He emulates their styles but very much has a style of his own."

Every musician's music evolves over time as he learns and develops his own style. Munce said he hopes his music has gotten better.

McFarlin said he believes Munce's music is getting it's own style.

"I believe he is at a stage in his evolution, and he is beginning to find his own voice," McFarlin said.

"I learned there's a billion good players out there, and it's hard to make a living just playing jazz," Munce said.

His peers said he has the potential to play jazz for a living.

"I think that's where Lucas is heading to pursue a professional career in New York," McFarlin said.

Munce said he has an interest in making a living playing music.

"I hope something might happen, but I haven't limited myself to think I can make a living playing jazz," Munce said. "The people who get those kinds of gigs are phenomenal not just good."

Whatever Munce decides to do, he has certainly impressed his listeners and his peers.

"He is a great guy and really has a shot at making it," McFarlin said.

Munce can be heard with the band Wasted Potential at 9 p.m. Wednesday and will be playing with the bass player from this band, Micheal T. Brown, Thursday at the Waydown Lounge.

Ethnic groups discuss unifying efforts, goals

Rhonda Lee
staff reporter

Multicultural ethnic student organizations discussed the option of forming a student group with a common goal of changing the current way each group operates.

About 50 students from Black Student Union, Hispanic American Leadership Organization, Native American Student Body, Asian-American Students for Intercultural Awareness and other multicultural organizations were represented at the meeting in hopes of forming a consolidated governing body while preserving individual identities.

"When we talk about 'consolidation', as I see it, every single multicultural student organization based on this campus is being part of this group," Elsa M. Diaz-Bautista, president of HALO, said.

Cross-cultural communication among ethnic groups on campus would be one of the goals of forming the governing body, she said.

"We realize that we have to have a form of communication, a form of making sure we are doing the things that are not competing against each other, but doing the things to help each other," Diaz-Bautista said.

The consolidated group will be researching the possibility of being run like a miniature version of Student Senate, with the everyday operations being conducted like an average college council.

The members of each organization voted to start the preliminary efforts of getting the consolidation underway.

Intersection problems need solution now

QUICKread

► To contact city commissioners, call 587-CITY. This will connect you with people at City Hall who will tell you when the City Commission meets and commissioners' telephone numbers.

Drive safely, please. Unfortunately, the death of a student Monday opened our eyes to the needs of safer driving, turn signals at intersections in town and helmet safety.

Any city has an obligation to protect its citizens. Manhattan could protect students and residents alike by installing turn signals at intersections, or maybe even prohibiting left turns at the busiest intersections in town.

Traffic in this town is unbearable on a day-to-day basis. When it comes to All-University Open House, football weekends and various University events, it can be downright ridiculous.

Left turns could be prohibited at intersections near campus.

Why not contribute money from the City/University Tax Fund to add lights with turn signals or turn lanes at intersections close to campus? While it would only put a dent in the amount needed, the City/University money could spur other avenues into motion.

Saving lives is something worth spending the money on and something the University should care about.

Students, call the city commissioners and let them know this is needed. The commission has been working on the traffic problem for several years, but extreme measures are necessary.

Even if you do not get around to calling the city commission, start with yourself. Do not try to beat the next yellow light you come across. In the long run, how much time does 30 seconds save you when it puts your life and the lives of others in jeopardy?

Motorcyclists, wear a helmet. It is an easy way to protect yourself. Both motorists and motorcyclists need to be careful. Look out for one another.

Citizens unaware of anti-terrorist bill's aftermath

Ah, this Kansas weather. It snowed Sunday night, followed by sunshine and 60 degrees Monday — almost as volatile as President Clinton's moral compass.

As a good Republican, I feel it is my obligation to point out Clinton's character flaws. I believe he inhaled, but who really cares?

More pressing is his insistence that Congress pass the Omnibus Counter-Terrorism Act, commonly known as the anti-terrorism act, before Friday's anniversary of the April 19 bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City.

And it looks like Congress will play ball. Commonly billed as a response to the Oklahoma City bombing, the bill is a frightening throwback to the days when the FBI routinely disregarded the Bill of Rights to "protect" America from its own citizens.

The anti-terrorism bill was introduced in February 1995, two months before the bombing. If passed, it would broaden the federal government's power to investigate the activities of members of terrorist organizations.

What is a "terrorist organization," you ask? Who is a terrorist? According to the bill, a terrorist is a person who is a member of, supports or associates with groups "designated by the president as engaging in terrorism."

Sounds fair — I mean these militias and Freemen are getting out of control. They are bombing and shooting government types all the time. And those lunatics who advocate killing doctors who perform abortions? They need to be stopped.

What about Operation Rescue? While Randall Terry and his crew have never openly advocated violence, neither have they denounced the acts of violent extremists. And it is no secret the group openly flaunts federal law during protests, which often result in violent confrontations with pro-choice activists. Those right-wing extremists are a real threat to the safety and stability of our nation.

What about Earth First? This radical environmental group has sabotaged forests, equipment and roads, injuring numerous loggers who are just doing their jobs. And there is evidence connecting Earth First! with suspected Unabomber Theodore Kaczynski.

If Earth First! is suspect, so is the Sierra Club. Earth First! founder Dave Foreman, who never gave up his radical, often violent rhetoric, serves on the board at Sierra.

Both the right and left are potential targets of this "defender of our freedom." You will not hear politicians mention how your membership in Operation Rescue or the Sierra Club might land you in jail. Rather, they will say the bill prevents "international terrorists" from raising money in the United States and make it easier to deport such "terrorists."

At least that is what Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said, but the bill has to turn its back on the Constitution to do so. Resident immigrants can be held without knowing the evidence against them — "national security" reasons — and their trials can be kept hidden from the public.

This is not unlike the convictions of Gerry and Guiseppe Conlan in Great Britain for the Guilford pub bombings. The convictions were later overturned when evidence hidden under the guise of "national security" by Britain's new anti-terrorism law came to light.

"It's better than nothing," Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said. Schumer and Hatch on the same side? Something is amiss.

In saying the bill is "better than nothing," Schumer once again proves America's willingness to forget even recent history.

In the early 1970s, the Senate's Church Commission investigated FBI involvement in the decline and/or demise of the Young Socialists of America, the Socialist Workers Party, the Black Panthers and the American Indian Movement.

The Church Commission found the FBI, under its Counter Intelligence Program (COINTELPRO), had broken into offices, stolen documents, instigated violence, framed and entrapped activists — there was even evidence pointing to the FBI's involvement in the deaths of Black Panther leader Fred Hampton and AIM leader Ray Oaks.

COINTELPRO was shut down as a result of the Church Commission.

The new anti-terrorism bill will bring back the COINTELPRO days. No, this is not all Clinton's fault. But as a former radical, a man who has taken the heat for the "un-American" political activism of his youth, Clinton's moral compass should tell him this is a bum deal.

But that cold wind is blowing again.

Prioritizing education

Myview

JUSTIN Wild

For the most part in America, we deem our country the land of opportunity.

The testament to this lies in the fact that yearly, many immigrants come to our country looking for better jobs and a more prosperous life. Our ancestors came to America looking for these same things. The right to our lives and liberty were laid out by forefathers interested in equal opportunity for everyone.

Granted, this rhetoric has often fallen short under the chains of slavery and social cycles that exist to this day. One of the social areas in which America has stumbled, and sometimes fallen, is public education.

First and foremost, I believe everyone deserves an equal opportunity to an education. However, the type of education that should be available to everyone is left in an undefined area.

Many of the people in my high school class went on to college. However, since that time, many have taken time off from higher education or switched their direction away from college completely.

We were trained in high school, by our curriculum, that college was the next step in life to take. For some of us, it was. For others, though, it isn't. This becomes a problem when you consider the amount of money and time spent by students who aren't able to keep up in the tough academic world of college and end up dropping out.

America needs a system of public education that sets students on a track in life. Public education in America is a spread-out area. Alongside television and endless other technological media, certain aspects of modern education have taken an aimless direction. Education needs to take a separate direction and give students a curriculum that has an end goal of a productive future.

On the broadest scale, we need two separate curricula: One points students toward college and one directs them toward a trade. Both curricula should still center on skills in the language arts, mathematics and science. Additionally, they should teach life skills involving filling out tax forms and budgeting.

After that, they should branch into their defined areas: The standard vocational/technological curriculum would be expanded to include basic engineering principles as well as standard trades.

The collegiate-based curriculum should delve into advanced mathematics, science, language arts and the humanities. Students should also be able to enter into an early "major" in the area they intend to study after high school. Essentially, they will have somewhat of a collegiate experience, as they would undergo a general education program while studying in an intensified field of study.

One of the ongoing criticisms that arises around our generation is the fact that we have an aimless quality about us. If this does exist on a wide level, it is because the system of education we came through had no direction. After all, how many of you sitting out there in the K-State Student Union or in class actually had a high school curriculum that prepared you, in an academic sense, for college?

We are not all cut from the same cloth; we shouldn't be forced into an academic world based on the principle that we all have the same capabilities.

KINESIOLOGY 101 SHOULD NOT BE A REQUIREMENT

Editor,

With the onset of linear fees, many students like myself will be inclined to reconsider enrolling in classes they do not need or want to take. K-State requires students to take Kinesiology 101, a class that has not only become a hindrance to students, but also to the kinesiology department.

David Dzewaltowski, department head, said the department has limited resources to present the class to the whole student body. He also said he would like to replace the University requirement with a similar three-hour class that would not be a University requirement. However, this bill has been presented to Faculty Senate, and it was tabled, meaning that there would be no vote until a later date.

K-State is the only school in the Big 8 to require such a class, and as pointed out by my Kinesiology 101 instructor, if the fundamentals that are taught in this class haven't already been instilled in you (i.e. working out and watching your diet), this class will probably not change your way of life.

Since completing the class three and a half weeks ago, my grade still has not been turned in, indicating there is limited resources in the department to complete the needs of the student.

With the election of a new Student Senate, I would like to see this issue addressed and supported, letting Faculty Senate know the students do not want to be required to take Kinesiology 101.

Please test our lines of communication with Student Senate and talk to your student senators. If you support this issue, let them know that you'd like to see their support, so when it is presented to Faculty Senate, they will know the opinion of the student body and a sensible course of action will be taken.

RACE STILL TOO MUCH AN ISSUE IN THIS SOCIETY

Editor,

Rob Wood's letter in the April 12 Collegian, "Collegian exhibits liberal bias" and the prevailing attitude on race relations in our society has caused me to respond.

There seems to be a problem with the way we are looking at our society. We are so concerned with black and/or white issues that we are missing the meat of the matter.

Rodney King, the Hispanic immigrants and the incidents at Ruby Ridge, Idaho, and Waco, Texas, are all acts of aggression by public servants.

The fact that society allows officers of the law to beat up someone and then use the stress levels of their jobs as a plea for understanding for the American public is crazy.

In all these cases, the potential suspects were in the wrong, but that does not give officers the authority to arbitrarily disperse brutal life-threatening justice.

Public servants are here to serve the public and to consistently enforce the law of the land, not to manufacture their own justice system.

There is a disparity in our system that many people who are not of color do not understand. It is a fact that as a black male, I get followed each time I go into Wal-Mart. At night, people walk on our beautiful campus grass, when there is room for both of us on the sidewalk. I get pulled over every time there is an alert for a 6-foot tall black male in any town or city I am in.

This is what prompted the saying, "It's a black thing. You wouldn't understand."

The one thing I'm sure we can all understand is as long as we look at the small picture, we will continue to be "bamboozled, hoodwinked and led astray."

We have to stop worrying about things like, "I like black folks, Hispanic folks, Asian folks or white folks," and start being concerned with whether the justice will be for all, or just us.

STUDENTS SHOULD VOICE SUPPORT FOR FUTURE FEES

Editor,

The K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics offers many things to the students and faculty of this University. It brings in large amounts of people, money and publicity to the school.

What many students might not realize is the athletic department is having some financial trouble and has asked the students to give more help in assisting to pay for its budget.

According to the proposal brought before Student Senate, it is expected that by the year 2000, the athletic department will have expenses of about $13.25 million, but it will have a revenue of only $12.8 million. This shows at the current funding, the athletic department is expected to have a debt of $450,000 by the year 2000.

Students are only paying $34 a year in athletic fees, which is quite low compared to most other Big 8 schools. Raising this athletic fee would benefit both students and the athletic department. Topping the list would be the protection of ticket prices and prime seating for students at sporting events. The fee would also assist with NCAA Division I certification for the school, and it would help bring K-State into compliance with Title IX.

As you can see an athletic fee increase would not be just another stupid fee increase the University would hit you with. It actually has significant benefits for the students.

But as we sit, the proposal was voted down, and we will be facing a $3 increase on all sporting event tickets to help compensate for the expected debt in the Athletic Department.

If you voice your support to a Student Senator for the increase of $34 a year, it would result in a strong vote in favor of the increase when it comes up again in two years.

Ultimately, a fee increase would cause the athletic department to spend much less time on collecting funds and more time on winning games and getting publicity for the school, which I think is the ultimate goal of any athletic department in the first place.

COLUMNIST ASSUMES RADICALS ARE CONSERVATIVE

Editor,

In his April 5 column "Liberals less dangerous to public than conservatives," Scott Allen Miller makes the common and often repeated mistake of trying to label people by a certain political name or group, and in doing so, tries to promote his own political beliefs by giving a bad name to the opposing side.

Miller does not make the distinction that can be learned in any political science class. It is the difference between conservatives and liberals, the basic political belief groups in the United States and those who belong to the extremist categories of nihilists, radicals and revolutionaries.

Miller likes to believe, for his own desire of branding some group the "problem group," that nihilists and the others are made up only of the "right wing," but he fails to realize the political spectrum actually acts more as a circle. It places conservatives and liberals on opposing sides of the circle's center, centrists in between the two, and radicals, revolutionaries, etc., opposite the centrists.

Extremist groups often cannot be associated with any one political theory and are most often made up of both "liberal" and "conservative" ideas and members, while the great majority of Americans are on the curve somewhere between conservative and liberal on the centrist half.

Conservatives, in the true sense of the word, are not out to destroy the United States, arm themselves for a coming U.N. takeover of our country, and they are not stocking up on food and supplies to survive a nuclear holocaust. Unlike Miller's "many," most people anyone meets on the streets of any city in this country would laugh at the U.N. takeover theory, no matter what political affiliation they are.

Further, contrary to Miller's claims, conservatives did not and never will support or acclaim bombings of federal buildings such as the Oklahoma City incident or the killing of Americans.

Unlike Miller likes to imply, the militia groups that are filling the newspapers and the television broadcasts are not conservatives. These people are the radicals and the nihilists that come from the far extreme of both sides.

In implying these persons are only "conservatives," Miller seems to be launching the beginning of his own silly political theory: Conservatives today in government are actually militia agents trying to set up control in the reductions, support for the business community and job creation and strong pro-active foreign policy. Nowhere does conservatism mention overthrow of the U.S. government, a U.N. conspiracy or other such ridiculous ideas.

I suggest Miller realize the distinctions and differentiate conservatives and liberals alike from the idiocies of the radicals, revolutionaries and nihilists. By trying to associate any one group with extremist groups, not only is Miller insulting his target group as a whole, but he is also ignoring many of the basic definitions of the words.

BICYCLE RACKS SHOULD BE MOVED TO ANOTHER AREA

Editor,

Constant improvements are taking place at K-State. Money from the city has been allocated to the University for hiring a consultant to design a plan for new bicycle paths on campus. However, there's one exclusive area on campus that could immediately use special attention in achieving a user-friendly bicycle/pedestrian area.

The position of three bicycle racks in the quadrangular area between McCain Auditorium and Kedzie, Calvin and Fairchild halls creates a quandary perilous for both bicyclists and pedestrians. Due to the poorly located bicycle racks, obstacles have risen. Not only has the traffic flow become aggravated and created an accident-prone area, but landscaping has also been damaged and defaced.

Another basis for relocation would be the stations of the racks are encouraging violation of University regulations, regulations of which the University is liable for the enforcement.

With the three bicycle racks being on a grass surface, bicyclists would be violating University regulations in order to park in them. The 1995-96 K-State Bicycle Regulations state "Bicycles shall not be parked on the grass or in any other area that is under cultivation." With this in mind, it would not only be in behalf of the students to relocate the bicycle racks, but the University as well.

The solution to the predicament is relocating the three bicycle racks to a constructed and well-lit concrete bicycle pad between Calvin and Kedzie halls. A coordinating bicycle path from the bicycle stands to Mid Campus Drive, would increase efficiency of the traffic flow in this area and give the bicyclists a course of their own.

Bicyclists intermixing with pedestrians is not a good combination.

Sports

Heaven is a place on earth

As the sun begins to go down on the first warm spring night every year, children all around the country stand in lines and offer themselves up to a draft.

Not a war draft or a football draft or even a drafting table.

They are mostly young boys, but ever-increasing numbers of girls have begun to join the ranks.

This draft to which they have sacrificed themselves is a childhood form of the baseball draft.

It sounds kind of like this:

Captain of the Blue Brigade, little Johnny says, "For my pitcher, I want Tommy Lee."

Then the captain of the South Street Hurlers calls for Jimmy.

Back and forth they go until at the end, there is one child left.

Usually that child is younger, smaller, or just plain less athletic than the others. But, he still gets a chance to play.

Take a look at a baseball team — any age group.

There are short and chunky kids, tall and lanky kids, tall and chunky kids, and short and fast kids — and they are all there for one thing and one thing alone. They want to play baseball.

Football is often left to the bigger guys, the ones who can run the fastest or the ones who can throw the straightest.

Myview

SHANA Newell
sports editor

Basketball is overrun by people with size. Big, tall and powerful in the paint and fast and nimble on the perimeter.

Not baseball. In America's game, everyone is given a chance. In a way, that is the beauty of baseball.

Earl Weaver, one of the game's greatest managers, once said baseball was the greatest game ever invented. I agree.

"You can't sit on a lead and runs a few plays into the line and just kill the clock. You've got to throw the ball over the goddamn plate and give the other man his chance. That's why baseball is the greatest game of them all," he said.

What makes baseball even more beautiful is watching the game itself unfold.

There are friends of mine who will sit for hours on end and argue with me that baseball is the stupidest game invented.

I ask them two questions. Have you ever watched a baseball game in person, and have you ever played baseball?

More often than not the answer to both of these is no.

It is the most beautiful feeling in the world to wake up to a bright, sunny day, pack a lunch (with sunflower seeds included) and head out to the ballpark.

Any ballpark will do (as long as there's grass — turf just doesn't smell the same).

It could be a Little League team practicing for the big game.

Or a college team struggling to stay in the conference race.

Or minor league games with players who still play baseball just for the fun of it.

Or major league contests that have the potential for a grand slam fiesta or a no-hitter phenomenon.

Any way you look at it, it is relaxing. Watching a baseball game is like a bit of heaven.

It is almost like when Kevin Costner's character's father in "Field of Dreams" asked his son, "Is this heaven?" referring to a baseball diamond.

"No, it's Iowa."

"It looks like heaven to me," he said.

Simple, easy and pure — that is baseball.

OK, so watching baseball is not your cup of tea.

Ever played?

Well, OK, I haven't either. But have you played softball or streetball? I have. And I have got to say playing softball is an experience I look forward to every week in the spring, summer and fall.

The time is here again, unless Mother Nature keeps interfering.

Never fear, the warm weather is on its way. Softball and baseball fanatics alike will no longer be kept from their heaven on earth.

Then there is my favorite reason for baseball — the camaraderie.

I can go to any baseball park, sit down and meet someone new. What do we always talk about? Baseball — to start off with, anyway. It is the ice breaker. It is a common language. It is something almost anyone can understand.

It is heaven.

■ He earned National Player of the Week and Big 8 Player of the Week honors. But David Hendrix said being a leader on his team is something he finds hard to do

Shana Newell
sports editor

The K-State baseball media guide lists him as one of the most consistent performers ever to wear the K-State uniform.

It is right.

Senior David Hendrix, a left-hander on the Wildcat squad, has been a constant threat at the plate for opposing pitchers.

He is a two-time, second-team, all-Big 8 selection who can seemingly do everything. He is mostly the designated hitter on the K-State team, but he can also play first base and patrol the outfield.

Last week, Hendrix was named the Mizuno National Player of the Week and the Big 8 Player of the Week for his performances against Wichita State and Missouri.

For Hendrix, it was a recognition he enjoyed.

"It's exciting. It would have been better if we'd won our two games, but it's an honor. It shows I've worked hard and that people have noticed I've worked hard."

It's kind of hard to lead when you're playing only half the game as a d.h. I don't go out and try to be a leader. It's hard to lead 25 guys.

DAVID HENDRIX DESIGNATED HITTER

Hendrix said.

A four-year component of the Cats' offensive machine, Hendrix hails from Leawood, a suburb of Kansas City, Kan.

In his first three years at K-State, Hendrix has played in 147 games, starting 135 of them. In 513 at bats, he's had 18 home runs (not counting the eight he has this season), and averaged .292 batting entering the 1996 season, including a .339 average last year, a career-best.

Ask Hendrix why he chose K-State, and he will cite the above statistics as his main reason.

"I got an opportunity to play right away here," he said.

Other schools that looked at Hendrix included conference rivals Missouri and Kansas, and national powerhouses Arkansas and Wichita State.

But Hendrix said when it came down to where he would play immediately, Kansas and K-State were the only choices.

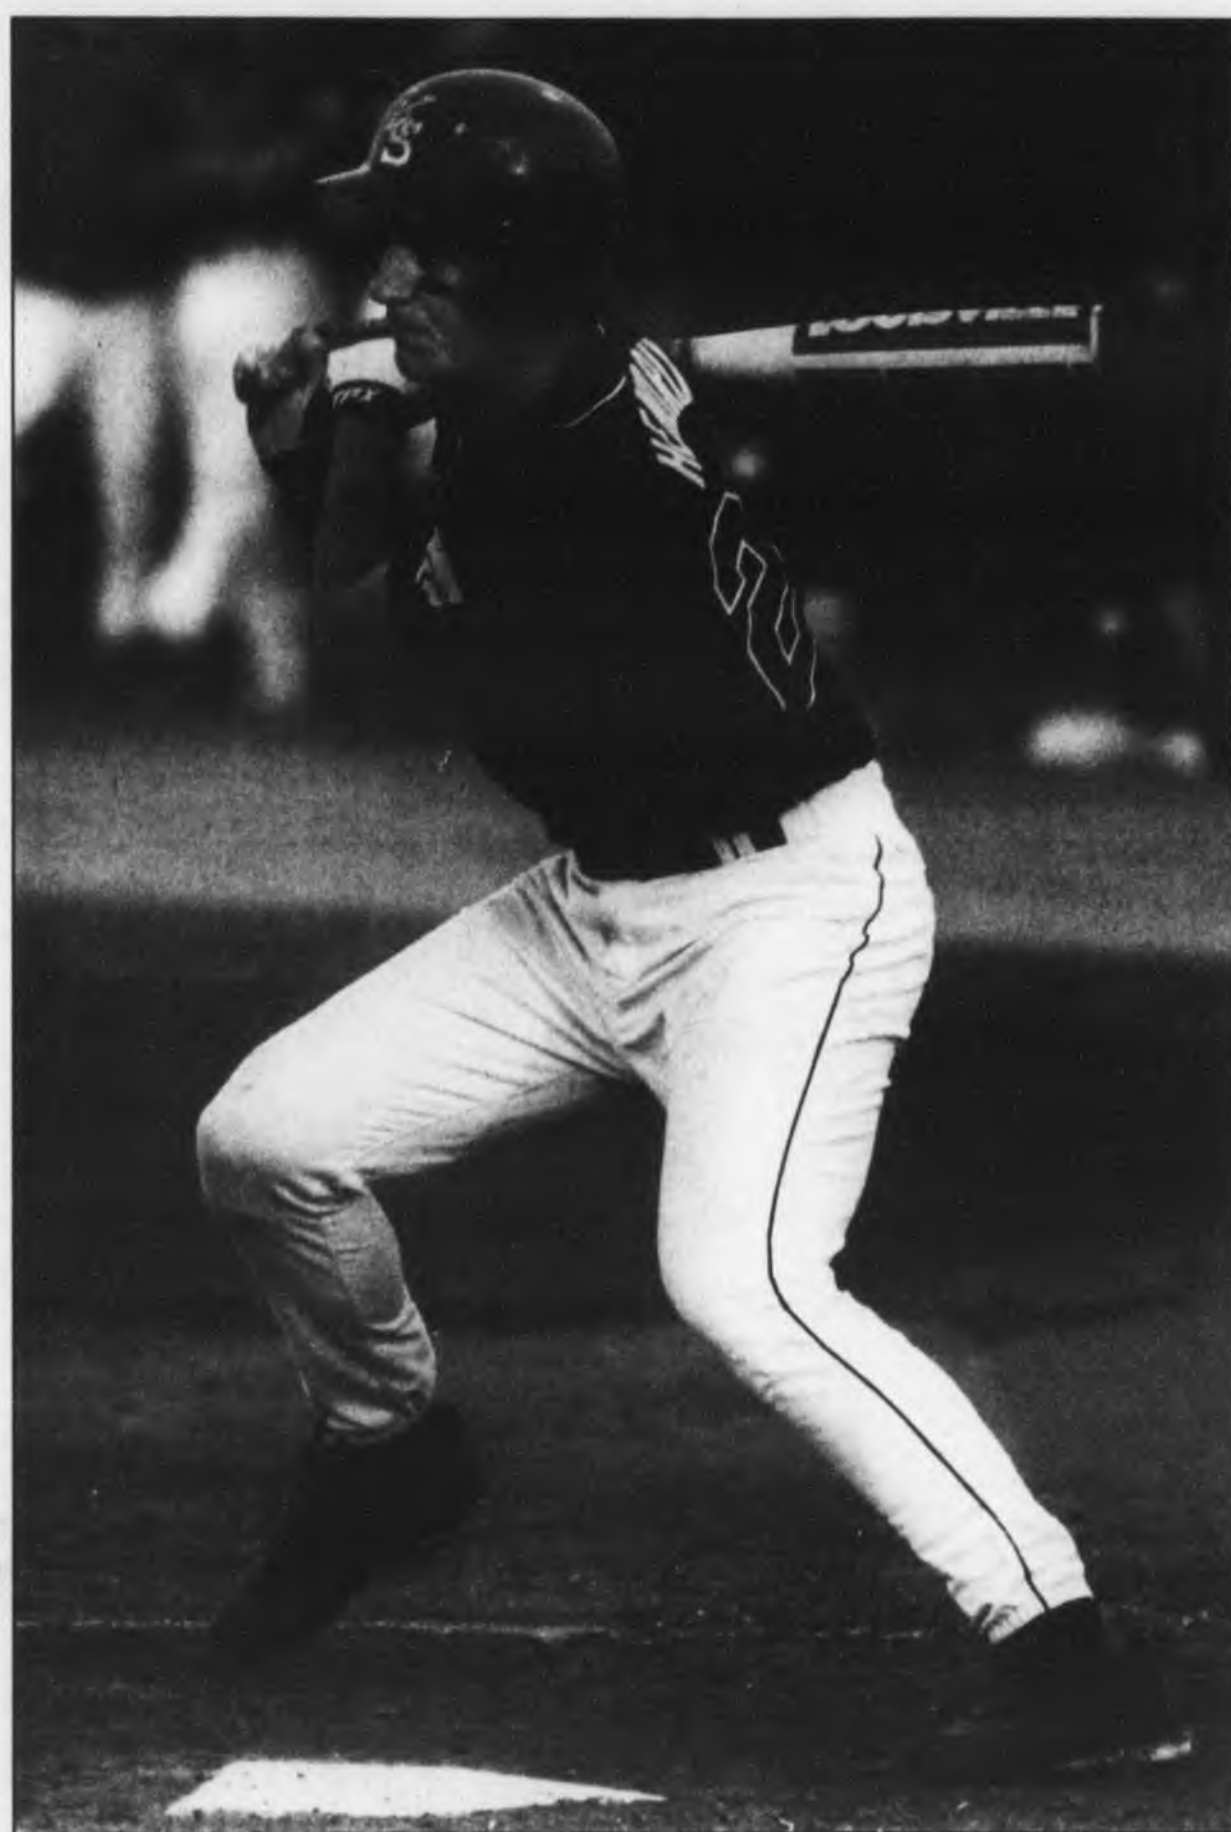

"When I looked at all the options, I realized K-State was the place for me," he said.

Has he ever regretted the decision to play with the Cats?

"It's been a good decision for me," he said. "We had the worst team in K-State history when I was a sophomore. It'll be extremely gratifying to see where this team goes."

A glance at the team's box scores lately indicates the team might be going nowhere fast. But Hendrix said he is not so sure.

"We have the potential to be a great team, but everybody needs to start playing up to their potential," he said.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Designated hitter David Hendrix watches the ball after fouling it off against a Nebraska pitcher last week. Hendrix was named Big 8 Player of the Week for three home runs he hit during a single game against Wichita State.

In a season where there are quite a few seniors, many players might look to Hendrix to lead the team emotionally. Hendrix is not one of them.

"There's a lot of seniors on the team," he said.

"It could be anybody. It's kind of hard to lead when you're playing only half the game as a d.h. I don't go out and try to be a leader. It's hard to lead 25 guys."

But it's a step he is sometimes willing to take.

After a loss at home to Missouri earlier this season, Hendrix took the reins into his own hands and called a players-only meeting. He said he felt like it was necessary.

"It's frustrating to sit and watch the team lose. It's frustrating for fans and for parents to come out and see a team that can play, not play," he said.

A criminal justice major, Hendrix said he would like to continue playing baseball as long as he can.

"I want to keep playing," he said, "just to prove to myself that I can play after college. I think that I can."

He has certainly indicated he can. Hendrix is hitting

.315 with eight homers and 33 RBIs this season.

His name is found all over the charts in K-State baseball history, including sixth on the all-time hits (189), fifth in runs (135), fourth in RBIs (141) and third in doubles (46) and home runs (26).

He needs only four more home runs to top the homer list.

Cats stun Missouri's pitching

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Reliever Jon Oiseth struck out six batters in four innings to lead K-State to a 7-4 victory over Missouri Tuesday night.

Oiseth, who replaced starter Matt Koeman in the sixth, allowed just two hits to earn his first save. Koeman is now 5-3.

K-State (21-15 overall, 5-8 in the Big 8) jumped on Missouri starter Jay Bell (4-3) in the first inning. After Chris Hess singled, he seemed to pick off first base, but a dropped throw at second base by Justin Hellmann opened the flood gates.

David Hendrix singled in Hess from second base.

That was followed by an RBI double by Jason Bichelmeyer and an RBI single by Adam Green to give K-State a 3-0 lead.

Trailing 5-1 in the fifth, Missouri (26-12, 9-5) tried to mount a comeback.

With two on, Ryan Fry singled to center field, scoring Matt Nivens to make it 5-2. Aaron Jaworowski then walked to load the bases. Jeff Terrell walked, scoring another run to make it 5-3.

With two out, Tom Buchman singled to center field scoring Fry, but Jaworowski over ran third base and was tagged out.

► GOLF TEAM IN 7TH PLACE AFTER 2 ROUNDS

The K-State men's golf team was in seventh place after two rounds of play in the Diet Pepsi Shocker Classic in Wichita.

As a team, the Cats shot a two-round total of 615. That is only one stroke behind sixth-place Kansas and two strokes behind fifth-place Wichita State.

Leading the way for the Wildcats was senior Scott Hovis. He shot a first-round 79 and second-round 74 to finish the first two rounds at 153 and tied for 15th place. He is tied with five other golfers at the 15th spot.

Eight golfers are tied at 21st after two rounds of play. Among those eight are senior Troy Halterman who shot rounds of 76 and 78 on the day.

Seniors Chad Myers and Jason Losch are also among those knotted in the 21st-place tie.

Myers shot rounds of 75 and 79 while Losch turned in rounds of 78 and 76, respectively.

Sophomore B. J. Walter is tied with Matt Jobe of Oral Roberts for 78th place after shooting rounds of 81 and 86.

► CYCLING TEAM FINISHES IN 3RD PLACE

The cycling team finished in third place at the Veishea Classic in Ames, Iowa, last weekend. With two cyclists entered in the event, K-State managed 76 points overall. Eight teams competed in the race.

Bill Stolle, a senior in biology and life sciences, placed first in the Collegiate-A races. Bill Marshall, a freshman in kinesiology, placed 11th.

Iowa State, who was host to the competition, finished first with 168 points. Kansas finished second with 120, although none of its members finished in the top five.

Stolle said he credited Kansas with helping him win the race. "I fed off a Jayhawk's mistake and rode into the finish," he said.

The club's next action will be a mountain bike race next weekend in Emporia.

Anyone interested in competing should contact Bikeworks at 776-2453, Marshall said.

► High school: Little River Position: center
Projected Position: small forward
Height: 6-foot-1
Stats: 19.7 points per game

Chicago, Memphis, Dallas, New York, Baltimore — hotbeds of high school basketball talent. Not often are central and western Kansas mentioned high on that list.

But the fall signing period saw K-State's men's and women's basketball teams looking to the smallest schools in the state in search of talent.

And the search paid off. Six-foot-one center Nicky Ramage of Little River and 6'6" center Josh Reid of Brewster were the first additions to the Wildcats' 1996-97 rosters.

Both come from 1A schools. Both led their teams to state championships — Reid in 1995, Ramage in 1995 and 1996. Now both look forward to playing in the purple and white.

"I'm pretty excited about it," Reid said. "This is about as good as I could have hoped for."

Making the transition from high school to college is hard enough — just ask any of the hundreds of athletes whose college careers never pan out after stellar prep days. Finding successful college players in schools that small is almost unheard of.

But don't tell Ramage and Reid they can't succeed at the next level. They've already taken the first step — they know what they need to work on.

"Where to begin? My defense, my rebounding, my post game, my outside game. Basically everything," Ramage said.

A center in high school, Ramage will likely play forward for the Cats, perhaps even small forward.

"With the team we have, Nicky is definitely a center," Little River coach Shane Cordell said. "But with her quickness she can easily move down to a wing position. And she has a great shooting touch — she's good from 17 feet in, and in time could be a real perimeter threat."

For Reid the transition will be even more pronounced. At 6'6", he played center at Brewster and was often the tallest player on the floor. But he's projected as a shooting guard at K-State.

"I need to work on my ball handling more than anything," Reid said. "But I like the guard spot. That's probably my most comfortable position."

And if numbers mean anything, both players have proven they can score both inside and out.

Ramage knocked down 14 points in the 1996 state championship game against Pretty Prairie before she missed her first shot. By the end of the game, she was stepping out to 16' and shooting jumpers.

Reid also scored most of his points in the post. But when he was two points off the 1A state tournament single-game scoring record, he casually stepped outside and nailed a 3-pointer.

"That's what he's going to be doing at K-State," Brewster coach John McLean said. "He can shoot the three. He just doesn't get the chance to that much in high school. I can guarantee at K-State he'll wake up from outside."

Reid's 47 points in the consolation game gave him a career total of 2,554, the most points scored by any player in the history of Kansas high school boys basketball.

"I told him before the game if there was any possible chance, he'd be in," McLean said. "Coming into the game, we knew he needed 38 to tie."

Reid averaged 25 points or more per game every year, including 29 points, 8.6 rebounds, 2.7 steals and 3.3 assists as a senior.

Ramage's numbers aren't quite as high, 19.7 points and 8.7 rebounds as a senior, but she only played 20 minutes per game. After all, when you're winning every game by an average of 30 points, why leave your star in?

"The best thing about Nicky is she is such a team player," Cordell said. "She could have played a lot more minutes, could have averaged 30 points per game, more maybe."

"But she didn't want to. She chose to be part of the team."

And her team thrived, going undefeated and winning state championships in back-to-back seasons.

"Numbers really aren't that important to me," Ramage said.

"For some people, getting your points or your rebounds are really important. I'd rather just get out with a win."

But there are some numbers that concern Ramage, and most of them start with six — as in 6'3" or 6'5". Playing against 1A competition, Ramage has had little opportunity to guard the bigger, stronger post players she's likely to face in college.

"I haven't guarded the 6'3", 6'4", 6'5" girls very much," Ramage said. "I get to in the summers playing AAU ball, but not much beyond that."

"I know I'll need to get stronger if I'm going to play defense or post up on people with that much size."

That summer experience, with a couple all-star games sprinkled in (she scored 16 points in the first half of the Mid-Kansas All-Star Basketball Classic before leaving for prom) will help Ramage adjust to the college game.

For Reid, it was summer play that made him a star. While K-State had recognized Reid for years, his first national exposure came as a starter for the Colorado Fleet Feet AAU team.

After stellar performances at tournaments in Phoenix and Las Vegas, Reid was recruited by Stanford, DePaul, Marquette, South Alabama and Kansas.

"Josh was a very skilled player. He had nice ball skills and was a real competitive kid," K-State assistant coach David Campbell said. "We knew we liked all those things, and when we saw him this summer, he did well against much better talent."

And college scouts are not the only people who have noticed Reid. Following the state consolation game he was swamped by kids with game programs, tee shirts, hats — anything they could get autographed.

"It feels pretty good," Reid said. "This really picked up after I signed with K-State. It's nice to know kids look up to you — you have to be a role model."

Have to be a role model? McLean wondered aloud whether Reid has ever been anything else.

"Josh is a very special player in every sense of the word," he said. "He's always done everything I've asked and he's never in any trouble. He's a model student. I'm just glad I've had the chance to work with him."

For Ramage, recruited by Southwest Missouri State, Wichita State and Houston, playing at K-State is as exciting good as it gets.

"I've always been a K-State person. I knew when I started playing basketball that I wanted to play for K-State," she said. "And when they started recruiting me, I couldn't be happier."

But the important thing is she's playing in college, something most athletes never get the chance to do.

"I'm excited to be going — and lucky. Most people don't get the opportunity to play sports to go to school, and I'm just lucky to have all the opportunities I do."

ened awareness on Friday.

"We are aware that it's the anniversary date," Maple said.

The Capitol Police have adjusted their work schedule so that more officers will be available Friday.

"They're going to be out there looking for anything unusual," Maple said. "They're going to be pretty visible and be around and be looking at stuff."

Rock said he didn't know of anyone who was staying home on Friday.

"We'll be on the job doing our job just like we always are," he said.

Coast Guard Capt. Ken Hollemon, the commanding officer of the pay and personnel center in Topeka, said the federal building had beefed up security before the Oklahoma City bombing after a man killed a security officer, then accidentally blew himself up in August 1993.

There are some very nervous people. I suspect there will be some people who will decide to take a day of leave.

The routes will not enter campus, except for a possible stop near the K-State Student Union, he said.

In other business, Sydney Carlin took the position of mayor and presented former mayor Stunkel with a gavel and a begonia plant.

"Because you chose to never use the gavel during our meetings, we commissioners wanted to give you a special remembrance of your gentleness, as well as the gavel," Carlin said.

Carlin said she looks forward to working with the commissioners during her term as mayor and looks for important decisions in the future.

"There is a national trend to shift more power and responsibility for programs and institutions back to counties and cities," she said.

We must be vigilant and ready to act in a responsible manner to provide resources to accommodate these changes."

Carlin presented some of her plans for the commission.

She said one of her plans is to find a way to provide the Kansas National Guard with a new armory in Manhattan.

"This is something we can do as a city to retain and provide more jobs," she said.

Carlin said she wants to improve the amount of public input the commission receives.

"I believe government should be responsible, accessible and accountable to its people. This takes time, creativity, energy, organization and commitment," she said.

"To the best of my ability I will offer the talents I have in these areas to the community of Manhattan."

Living in harmony

Pagans seek peaceful existence with nature, one another and themselves through magick

by Kris Bethea

Pagans come from all walks of life. They can be the teachers, police, business owners, secretaries, lawyers and others in the community.

Editor's note: Darian's, Moonshadow's and Kangra's names have been changed due to the sensitivity of the story material.

Darian is a Wiccan. Moonshadow and Kangra consider themselves Wiccan also, but they are pagans as well. They agreed to discuss their beliefs and share their knowledge on paganism.

Today's society makes it tough for people to talk about religions, and sometimes people are simply not comfortable talking about their beliefs. This can be one cause of discrimination and misunderstanding.

Religions

Paganism and Wiccan are the same, yet they are different, Moonshadow said.

Paganism is a belief that faces prejudice in society. Most pagans believe in more than one god and the concept of divinity residing in all things. Neopagans have a reverence for the earth and all its creatures, and they see all life as interconnected.

"Paganism, in general, is a whole lot of religions," Darian said. "They unify under one name but are all different."

The bond of paganism between these groups is based on the attitudes of the people, their heritages and their cooperation between each other.

"Pagans believe in constant self-improvement and in seeking to live in harmony with nature and with others," Peter Hoeman, alumnus in anthropology and English, said. "They see magick as a tool to help them attune with natural forces that are available to every person and believe that magick should never be used in a way that harms others."

Moonshadow said some people lump the term pagan to cover all Earth religions from shamanism to ceremonial magic to druidism and even to Zen and Buddhism.

"Paganism is a blanket term for all Earth religions," Moonshadow said. "Just in the last few years, the lines have started getting more defined."

However, Kangra said, if something bad comes up and threatens any pagan group, all the groups will jell quickly and protect it.

Hoeman said pagans are any of several religious groups that have similar beliefs.

"Pagans have a few binding beliefs," Darian said. "One of these is the practice of magick."

Magick is the focus of will to achieve one's goals and desires, he said.

"In order to do magick, you have to be focused," Darian said. "There must be a focus of desires, a focus of will and a complete focus on intent."

As times change, so do systems and beliefs. As the world becomes modernized, these groups have changed to move with the flow. The old spiritual beliefs are working into society and strengthening with diversity.

"Nowadays, the pagans and the neo-pagans are defining themselves more strictly," Kangra said. "If you take 10 pagans and put them together in one room, you'll come up with 15 different definitions of paganism."

Many sub-groups have been formed under the pagan tradition. Some of these are paleo-paganism, civilo-paganism, meso-paganism and neo-paganism. Neo-paganism is sometimes believed to be similar to Wicca.

Neo-pagans have broken away from Wicca, Kangra said.

"They don't do as much wheel-of-the-year worshipping. They don't put themselves in set-calendar form," Kangra said. "They just do the magick part. Being an Earth-centered religion, they perform magick but are not really into the worshipping phase."

These various pagan celebrations are based on the Wheel of the Year calendar of feast days. The celebrations are based on star formations and alignments.

The eight traditional holidays are Samhain, Oct. 31; Yule, during the winter solstice; Imbolc, Feb. 1; Ostara, during the spring equinox; Beltane, May 1; Litha, during the summer solstice; Lughnasadh, Aug. 1; and Mabon, during the autumn equinox.

"The Gregorian calendar has shifted dates back, so these dates can change," Moonshadow said.

On May 1, pagans will celebrate Beltane.

Beltane is a celebration about creation energy and sexuality, Darian said. It is a celebration of the gift given to us.

The ribbons are weaved around the maypole during an elaborate dance. The ribbons begin at the top with a wreath over them, as the dancers weave their way around the pole, the wreath goes down until it is at the bottom of the pole.

Darian said usually 30-40 people come, and there is a big dance. It is a powerful ritual.

"Babies conceived on Beltane are supposed to be blessed," he said.

The Heartland Spirit Festival is a festival put together by the Heartland Spirit Association. Each year 500-600 people gather at the end of May to celebrate.

They have been gathering every year for almost 10 years, Darian said.

Most pagan branches recognize the same holidays. The basis of most modern branches can be traced to Gerald Gardner.

Gardner is considered the father of modern paganism. He started the Gardnerian tradition in the mid-1950s. It is one of the most influential of the traditions.

"He is the first person to publish anything remotely resembling paganism," Darian said.

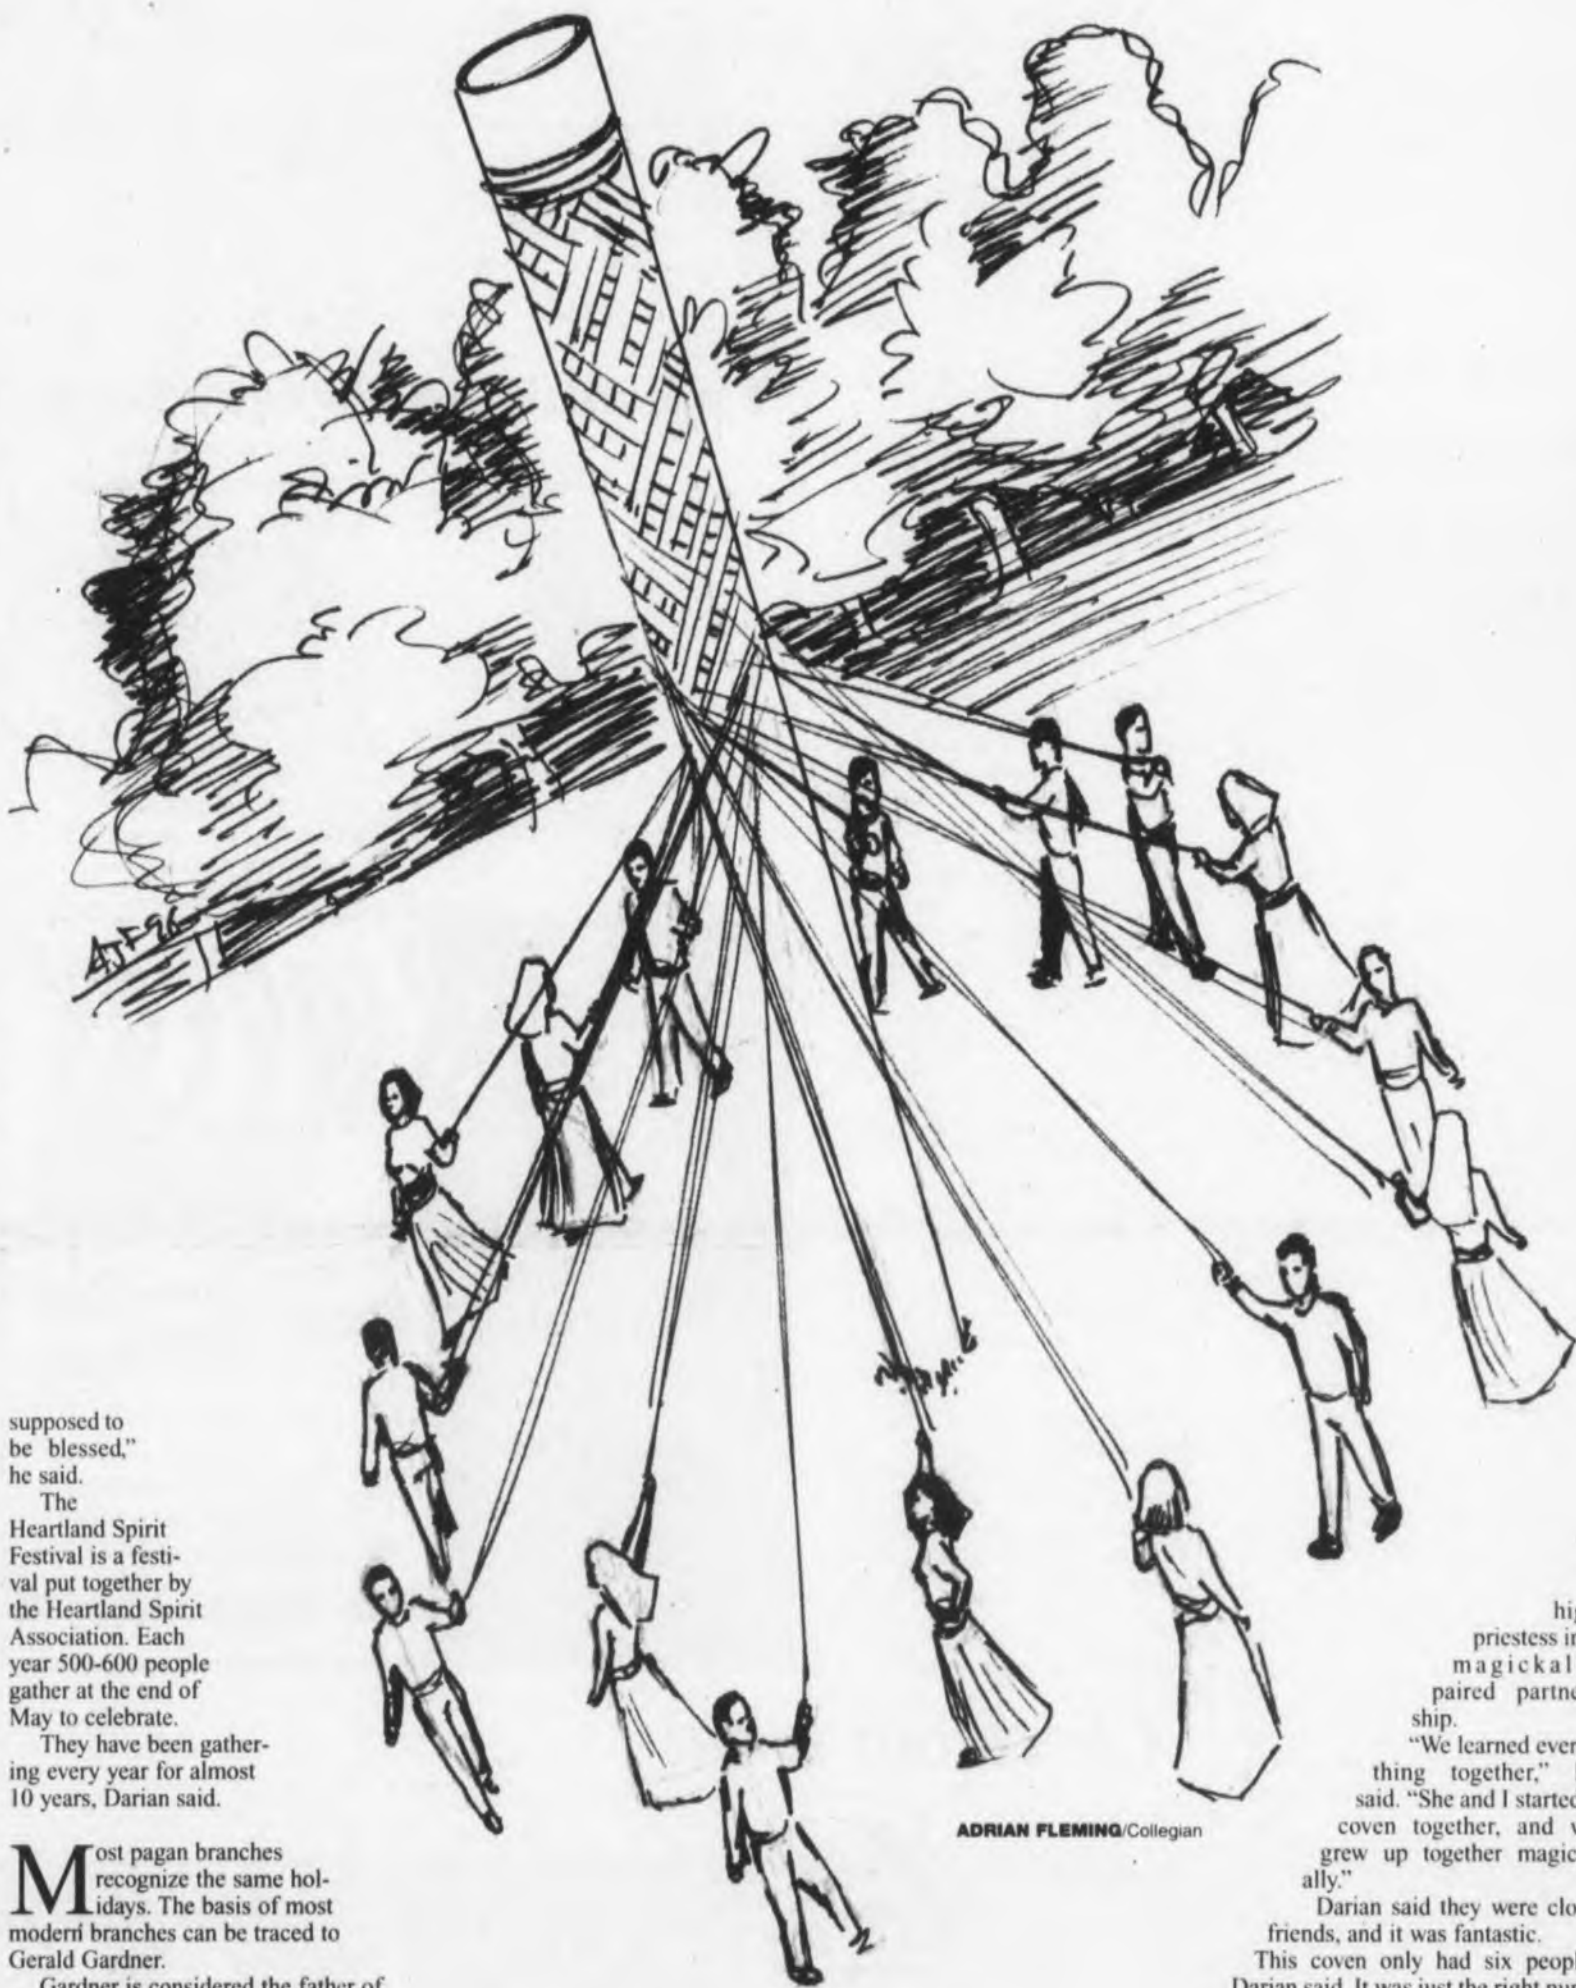

Gardnerian, named after Gardner, is considered to be one branch of Wicca. Other branches can include Alexandrian, Dianic, Seax and Traditionalist. These are just a few in an expanding network of beliefs and groups.

"Gardner's books have probably been the most influential in shaping the overall structure of the traditions within neo-paganism," Hoeman said.

Gardnerian is a joyous, peaceful, nature religion rather than focusing upon the periodic sacrifice and resurrection of the god, Hoeman said.

"Wiccan individuals worship the gods and goddesses," he said.

Listening, observing and reading are important when learning about any religion. Listening can be a form of meditation when one listens to the world outside and the world inside. It can also mean listening to others who wish to share knowlhigh priestess in a magically paired partnership.

"We learned everything together," he said. "She and I started a coven together, and we grew up together magically."

Darian said they were close friends, and it was fantastic. This coven only had six people, Darian said. It was just the right number.

"It only lasted for 15 to 16 months," Darian said. "We were a younger, more dynamic and energetic group."

It was a free-flowing group, he said.

"We used our own poetic pieces. Everybody had their favorite," he said. "Imagination is more important than knowledge sometimes."

The group did not last long after the high priestess left, he said.

Darian was also in a coven in Kansas City for a while.

"It was a highly structured group," he said. "We had particular things we had to say and to do. Nothing like the one we had here."

The group in Kansas City was organized and specific.

"They were very selective," Darian said. "Some professional people were concerned about images. They get paranoid because they could be discriminated against."

The rituals they did were structured, he said.

Rituals have a specific purpose in all groups. The ritual can be in obser-edge and experience.

"Everyone that comes in reads books, listens to others and makes their own decisions of what they want to do," Kangra said. "Wiccans are becoming more solitary."

They are losing traditions but are gaining more diversity, he said.

"In the U.S., it is possible for neopagans to be solitary, create or modify a system so that is their own unique take, yet still be considered a neopagan and be accepted by other neopagans — even though their beliefs are not exactly the same," Hoeman said. "They are able to be a loner to a degree yet still be accounted as part of the larger group."

Hoeman said this idea seems to be an American point of view: "The loner who really isn't a loner."

One local pagan organization, the Web of Oz, encourages individuals to be a part of their group without compromising their individuality.

The Web of Oz is in Lawrence. It has been there for nearly nine years, Darian said. It is a large group.

"The Web of Oz is a collection of all different kinds of individuals," he said.

Almost everyone in the Web of Oz is pagan, but not all of the members are Wiccan. The group draws on a variety of beliefs and traditions.

"They celebrate all the eight traditional holidays," Darian said.

The group has its own newsletter, Oz Notes, to keep everyone who is involved updated on happenings and holidays, Kangra said.

If someone is truly interested, it is fairly easy to find out about pagans, Darian said.

"They are pretty open," he said. "But it's who you know."

The Web requires someone to sponsor an interested person, he said. After a certain number of attendance times, a person can start going on his own.

Darian himself is solitary. He has been associated with a couple of different covens, but right now he is not.

Darian was a high priest for a while in one coven. He was paired with a Speech to feature ethnicity

QUICKread

► A Spanish professor hopes Chicana literature and the role of ethnicity in their writing will bring a fresh perspective to K-State.

Khristi Shell

Tey Diana Rebolledo invites everyone to investigate the case of missing women and loose women in Chicana literature.

Rebolledo, a professor of Spanish at the University of New Mexico, is the featured speaker for the ninth annual Department of American Ethnic Studies' program banquet and works to bring a visiting scholar to campus to give talks and to meet with students, said Harriet Ottenheimer, director of American ethnic studies.

What is hoped is the people who come will bring a fresh, authentic and scholarly voice to contribute to the academic debate about ethnicity in culture and to enhance our understanding of ethnicity and culture in the United States, she said.

The first presentation given for the American ethnic studies program, "Who Killed Presiliano Ulibarri? Or the Case of the Missing Women:

Clues for Cultural Studies" is at 6:30 p.m. today in the Cottonwood Room of the K-State Student Union.

This presentation is about how Hispanic women are missing from history, Rebolledo said.

"I'm going to talk about how academics and scholars and students of history need to play the part of the detective in order to find out about them," she said.

Trying to find out about these women during the colonial period to the 17th century is similar to a detective looking for clues to solve a mystery, Rebolledo said.

The second presentation is a colloquium sponsored by the Department of Modern Languages and Sigma Delta Pi, "11,000 Virgins, 51 Mar' as: Loose Women in Chicana Literature," and is at 4 p.m. Thursday in Union 206.

"I call it 'Loose Women in Chicana Literature,' but it is about how Chicana writers see their heroes or heroines as being these women that are sort of free of tradition," Rebolledo said. "Society kind of sees them as loose women, but they are really not loose women."

They are women who are independent, who become writers, and who build their own houses with their own hands, she said.

If anyone wants to find out more about Chicana writers, Mexican Americans or culture, these presentations are full of that kind of information.

Students, faculty and anybody attending any of these lectures will get a significant insight into Chicana writers and literature and the role of ethnicity in their writing, Ottenheimer said.

"It is something we live with all the time in the Southwest, but I think there is not a whole lot of knowledge about it here in Kansas, and we have some wonderful writers," Rebolledo said.

Panel to discuss women

AbdullNaser T. Abdulla
staff reporter

An international panel will discuss issues concerning women around the world.

The panel will meet at 7 p.m. Thursday in the International Student Center.

"It's open to the public," Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, said.

The panel includes women from Brazil, India and Uganda.

"We hope to get a picture of the whole world on how women see themselves," Fallon said.

The three panelists will be allowed to make a 10-minute presentation, Fallon said. After that, a question and answer session starts.

"Our hope is to bring American women and international women together to deepen our understanding of the global community we live in," Fallon said.

Minakshi Tikoo, associate professor from India, will be making a presensation Thursday.

"I'm going to talk about reproductive rights of women, AIDS issues and some cultural matters," Tikoo said.

Tikoo said she plans to emphasize the rights of women pertaining to marriage in India.

"It's going to be a more lighthearted discussion," Tikoo said.

Tikoo said it is good to have an international panel about issues pertaining to women because it will increase awareness.

The panel will discuss issues concerning negative and positive experiences of women in different cultures.

The opportunities for women in health, education, status and respect will all be discussed, Fallon said.

The panel will include Tikoo, Maria Flaminio from Brazil, and Daisy Kabagarama from Uganda.

The evening will end with refreshments and small group discussions, Fallon said.

COLLEGE OF BUSINESS

Management teams dominate global business competition

Lynn Wuger
staff reporter

In mid-March, two student teams represented the K-State chapter of Society for the Advancement of Management and traveled to Corpus Christi, Texas, to present their analyses of Liz Claiborne Inc.

These students competed in the International SAM Case Competition as part of SAM's annual international meeting.

The competition involved analyzing and evaluating a business case, which was written by another business school, and then giving a presentation based on the analysis.

"About a month before the meeting, the names of our teams are submitted, and then we are sent a business case," said Jeff Katz, competition team coach and assistant professor of management.

"All the teams competing analyze the same case, and the teams are judged on the presentations they developed," Katz said.

Each team consisted of five students and was placed in either the undergraduate or open division.

"There are two divisions of the competition," Katz said. "One is for undergraduates only, and the other is an open division, which includes graduate students. We had two teams, both consisting of undergraduate students."

The teams placed second in the undergraduate division and third in the open division.

"Placing first would have been nice, but second and third are equally rewarding — especially in a national competition," said Beth Jarrell, president of SAM and junior in management.

"It's a good feeling knowing all the hard work, time and effort you have put into a project have paid off in the end," Jarrell said.

Besides benefiting the students, placing high also gives recognition to the College of Business and SAM.

"The high placement of the teams says a lot about the quality of the College of Business and the SAM chapter," said Rachel Lewis, team competitor and senior in management.

"Hopefully this will help in the recruitment of future K-Staters."

Students were chosen to compete in the competition based on a points system.

"We base every event, meeting and activity on points," Lewis said. "The top 10 point-getters are selected to attend the competition."

Along with placing in the case competition, three students were selected as Outstanding National Students based on academic achievements and contributions to SAM. These students were Lewis, Bart Vance, senior in management, and Colby Jones, senior in accounting.

"I was honored when I found out I had received the Outstanding National Student Award," Lewis said. "This award means a lot to me since there are only 15 students in the nation that receive this award."

Andrea Bird, senior in management, was selected to the SAM International Board of Directors.

"We have a tradition of having a student on the international board," Katz said.

"The board governs the society, and it consists of business people, but they reserve three positions for students. Andrea worked hard for the position and deserves it."

Katz said he was pleased with the overall performance at the competition.

"They're students, but they are business leaders, as well," he said. "They have earned their way financially and academically to be there, and it's impressive to watch them display those leadership skills when they compete."

HE PROBABLY DID NOT SHAVE THEM

My guess is he is not an animal-rights activist. Vincent Gothard, senior in fine arts at the University of Florida, is in deep trouble because of a recent art project he created. He dipped live mice into boiling liquid polyester resin. He then allowed the resin to solidify. Subsequently, he sliced the hardened clear polyester and the encased mice into little blocks. And, to make it art, I suppose, he used the blocks to make a sculpture and mobile arrangement.

Now he is being charged with cruelty to animals. If convicted, he could face five years in jail and a big fine. Gothard's lawyer said the animal cruelty law is too vague and compared his client's treatment of mice to cooking live lobsters in boiling water.

Here is my suggestion. Let's dip Gothard in liquid polyester resin and cut him into blocks. If he does not taste like lobster, let's make him into a piece of artwork.

SHE LOOKS LIKE PEG BUNDY, TOO

You know her as the nighttime anchor for CNN Headline News with bad taste in clothing and hair color. She is Lynne Russell. I bet you did not know that ...

- She has a second-degree black belt in martial arts.
- She has a tattoo; I can't say where, though.
- In her spare time, she is a sheriff's deputy.
- For professional reasons, she turned down an offer last year to appear in a Playboy pictorial, even after she was assured she could keep her clothes on. She said she has framed Playboy's proposal letter and has it hanging on a wall.

- She and her husband, Jim Dunlap, own a wildlife preserve outside of Atlanta in rural Fulton County.
- Her fans have created an Internet newsgroup, alt.fan.lynn-russell. The FAQ for the newsgroup is kept at (<http://www.io.com/~shiva/rFAQ.html>). There is even more information on her at this site. Amazing.

I have nothing against left-handed people, OK? But a newsgroup dedicated to left-handedness is a bit much. It used to be that left-handedness was frowned upon by society, but as our society's moral fiber has been ripped asunder, more people have allowed their lefty tendencies to come to light. Some are even proud of it and flaunt their left-handedness in public.

Under the Americans with Disabilities Act a left-handed person cannot be fired from or denied a job for being left-handed. Left-handed people want to have special rights and favors rather than act like the rest of us, who are "right." Newsgroups like these only encourage people to choose the left-handed lifestyle.

More whining, sniveling and childishness courtesy of spoiled college students. Wow, life must be tough going to a private liberal arts school in Massachusetts. Compared to harvesting rice in Laos, salting and smoking fish in rural Scandinavia, and sifting through garbage for food in the Philippines, going to college in New England is a real hardship. Why, it hardly leaves time to construct such self-centered drivel as this.

Bill could save tracks

QUICKREAD

► A proposal before the Kansas Legislature aims to boost the Woodlands' profits, which have dropped because of competition from Missouri riverboats.

Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Legislature has not folded its hand on gambling yet.

The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee could have hearings on another gambling proposal designed to save the Woodlands, a Kansas City, Kan., track that is facing bankruptcy.

The bill would allow the state's race tracks to offer the same types of games that the Kansas Lottery offers, such as keno. It also would allow on-line games with racing themes.

The Legislature returns April 24 for its wrap-up session.

Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, plans to expand the proposal so that it would allow pull-tab lottery tickets to be sold through an automatic dispenser.

The dispenser can read the tickets through a bar code and the symbols on the pull-tab ticket flash on a video screen, indicating a winner. Some lawmakers said such dispensers look a lot like slot machines, which are illegal under Kansas law.

When the Legislature adjourned April 5, Vidricksen successfully postponed Senate debate on the gambling bill to get an opinion from Attorney General Carla Stovall about the constitutionality of the dispensers.

Stovall said such pull-tab dispensers are not electronic slot machines and are not illegal.

"The vending machines in question do not play or simulate the play of a video game," Stovall wrote in a letter to Vidricksen. "The machines do not generate the tickets or determine winners or prizes... The machines merely dispense tickets and assist in the play of a live pull-tab game."

The machines themselves do not dispense any money. People would have to take winning tickets to a clerk to receive cash.

"There shouldn't be any controversy," Vidricksen said. "It doesn't dispense any money. It's just like a lottery ticket. They're a dispenser. That's all they are."

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said she would be willing to schedule a hearing, even though the wrap-up session is scheduled to last only three days. Any bill approved by the Senate also would have to be approved by the House.

"The (wrap-up) session is where everyone gets their last shot, and the racing industry is no exception," Oleen said.

Racing industry leaders said tracks cannot compete with Missouri riverboat casinos. Fast-paced casino games, such as slot machines, blackjack and roulette, are more exciting than horse and dog races.

The Woodlands, which has both a horse and dog track, has been the hardest hit by the riverboat casinos in Missouri. Officials said if they do not lure back customers with another form of gambling, the track will have to declare bankruptcy.

Camptown Greyhound Park near Pittsburg has filed for bankruptcy in federal court in Topeka after cutting short its first season. Wichita Greyhound Park has started to lose money as well.

The Legislature, however, has been reluctant to expand gambling in Kansas.

The Senate rejected a constitutional amendment that would have allowed casinos in any county in which voters decided they wanted them.

The House has not taken up any gambling proposals.

Vidricksen said the additional games, along with the pull-tab dispensers, might be enough to keep the Woodlands open.

"It all depends on how people react to these little machines," he said.

Family mourns 7-year-old pilot

Associated Press

PESCADERO, Calif. — Caressing a white coffin adorned with flowers and a tiny blue airplane, Jessica Dubroff's mother remembered her as a child who could not be held back from her passion for flying.

"A month ago she said, 'I want to fly until I die,'" said Lisa Hathaway, during a funeral Monday for the 7-year-old girl who died trying to become the youngest pilot to fly across the United States.

"She knew how to reach into your soul and stay there. I'm grateful she's been in my life," Hathaway told some 200 people who gathered for the funeral in this coastal town about 40 miles south of San Francisco.

Jessica's 9-year-old brother, Joshua, who reportedly planned to fly over the service, was grounded by bad weather and was at the grave site.

In fog and drizzle, the mourners walked as the small coffin was driven slowly in a pickup truck from Jessica's back yard to a small graveyard among rolling green pastures.

They sang folk songs along the way, then said farewell to the strains of the hymn "I'll Fly Away."

Jessica died along with her father and flight instructor Thursday when their single-engine plane went down in an icy rain just after takeoff from Cheyenne, Wyo., during the second leg of the transcontinental, round-trip flight.

Criticism of the flight has been mounting since the crash, with many people saying children should not be allowed to fly. Others have wondered whether the dream of flying across the country was Jessica's or her parents'.

The funeral for flight instructor Joe Reid took place earlier Monday, and more than 500 people attended a vigil for him Sunday night. Lloyd Dubroff's funeral was set for today.

The attempt at the record apparently had already failed on the first leg out of Half Moon Bay, Calif., when Reid took the controls several times, Hathaway said.

She said on Sunday Reid had flown the plane once while Jessica took a nap. He also landed the plane in Cheyenne, and government investigators said his injuries suggested he was flying when the plane crashed.

"Jessica would have done the entire 7,000 miles even if she knew she wouldn't break the world record," Hathaway said. "She thoroughly enjoyed flying."

Mourners at the funeral were unbowed by the criticism of Jessica's last flight, saying instead she should serve as an example.

"She just lived life to the fullest. She was afraid of nothing," said the Rev. Orril Fluharty, pastor of the local United Church of Christ.

"We're so squelched by fear we don't live life."

Child starts fire in home 2nd time

Associated Press

LUTZ, Fla. — A 6-year-old boy who made headlines three years ago for taking the family car for a midnight spin is in trouble again: He set his house on fire — for the second time. No one was injured in the latest fire, which Mikey Sproul started by lighting a candle that fell onto his bed, Hillsborough Fire Chief Bill Kaplan said Monday.

His mother, Paula Sproul, was awakened by a neighbor's screams, and dropped Mikey and his baby sister out a second-story bedroom window to a neighbor before jumping to safety.

"The fire pretty much consumed everything," Kaplan said.

At age 3, Mikey took the keys to the family's silver Mercury and drove down U.S. Highway 41, a main north-south artery, smacking four vehicles and then veering into a ditch. "I go zoom," he explained.

A month later, he set his bedroom curtains on fire with a cigarette lighter. The ensuing blaze destroyed the Sproul's three-bedroom house and hospitalized Paula's then-husband, Mike Sproul, with burns. The Sprouls have since divorced.

The state took Mikey from his family in November 1993 after the first fire. He was returned to his mother's care in September by court order, with weekly visits from caseworkers.

The latest fire heavily damaged the house, owned by Paula Sproul's boyfriend Robert Sucarichi, in this Attack links man to old murder

Associated Press

HUTCHINSON — A former Hutchinson man in prison for trying to kill his fifth wife is charged with murdering his first wife 18 years ago.

The first-degree murder charge filed Monday against Phillip R. Parks, 45, stemmed from an investigation in New Mexico, where he is serving 12 years for trying to kill his fifth wife, Viola Parks.

New Mexico authorities said Phillip Parks was stabbing Viola Parks when he told her, "I'll kill you just like I did Rachel!"

That alleged statement led Albuquerque police last year to contact the Reno County Sheriff's Department in Hutchinson, where Rachel M. Parks died June 16, 1978.

The couple and its two small children were living then in a small apartment in Hutchinson, Reno County Attorney Tim Chambers said. On the day Rachel Parks died, a neighbor saw water flowing under the door of the apartment and called Phillip Parks' father, who came to the home.

Rachel Parks, 26, was found in the bathtub, and her death was ruled a drowning, Chambers said. Phillip Parks was charged with murder and bound over for trial, but the judge threw out statements he gave investigators before his arrest.

The Kansas Court of Appeals upheld the ruling on the evidence and the case was dismissed without prejudice — meaning it could be refilled at a later date — in March 1981.

Chambers and Reno County investigators heard from Albuquerque police about a year ago.

"They said that Parks would be going on trial for the attempted murder of his fifth wife, Viola," Chambers said. "While he was stabbing her, he made incriminating remarks about our case."

Chambers, who attended the trial, said Viola Parks testified that Mr. Parks was trying to kill her by stabbing her in the throat. "He also made some statements indicating he also killed his first wife," Chambers said.

Further interviews with Phillip Parks followed.

"He didn't give a confession," Chambers said.

"He still insists he didn't have anything to do with (Rachel Parks' death)."

bedroom community 25 miles north of Tampa.

Near midnight, as his mother and sister slept, Mikey took a cigarette lighter and a candle into his room and lit the candle.

It fell from his dresser, igniting his bed and a pile of toys. Mikey went to his mother's room, hopped in bed with the two of them and fell asleep, Kaplan said.

It was not clear if Mikey tried unsuccessfully to wake her first. The boyfriend was not home at the time.

A neighbor, 20-year-old Joshua Santiago, noticed the fire while working on his car. Sproul dropped her children to Santiago.

Kaplan said charges are not likely in the latest case because of Mikey's age. "Children have a natural curiosity with fire," he said. "Some children more than others."

A television show about Mikey's car ride also brought out his natural father, a prison inmate who had been dating Paula Sproul just before he was incarcerated and realized when he saw the show that Mikey was his child.

A blood test later confirmed the paternity of Edward A. Brayton, who has filed a custody suit. Brayton is serving a grand theft sentence at Union Correctional Institution in Raiford.

vance of a holiday or simply a thanks to the gods. It can also be to help someone in the group.

A ritual is any ordered sequence of events or actions. These can be directed thoughts and can be repeated in the same manners.

They are designed to produce a predictable, altered state of consciousness. In these altered states, magical results might be obtained.

Rituals are for centering oneself and helping a person achieve a calm state of mind, Darian said.

"It gives a feeling of oneness," he said. "That is what you strive for. That whole step-by-step process is what gets you into the right state of mind."

People can use incantations and burn herbs, candles or incense, among other things, to cast circles.

"Magick is a free-form thing," Darian said. "What works for some may not work for someone else."

Methods differ, he said, but the end results are the same.

"Everyone must agree about the structure of the ritual," Darian said. "There must be a consensus. Otherwise it will never happen."

Ritual is an important part of all religions.

Kangra said it is not the religion itself that makes a person bad or good. It is a person's own will that determines it.

People can change, but only if they will it, he said. It is just people's perceptions.

"The more I look and learn of the world, the more I see how personal it really is," Kangra said.

► OKLAHOMA CITY BOMBING

Muslims look past stereotypes

 AbdullNaser T. Abdullah
 staff writer

One year has passed since the Oklahoma City bombing. Families are still mourning the deaths of their loved ones while searching for answers. Why did this happen? Who was behind it? Who is really to blame?

Early speculation gave answers. Muslims. Islamic terrorists. Muslim fundamentalists.

This caused discomfort for the Islamic community in America. A total of 200 incidents of harassment, assault and property damage were reported.

"We do not generalize what happened on all of the American people," Abdulaziz Al-Sahal, graduate student in food science, said.

The attacks and finger-pointing stopped when official investigation results came out. The Muslims were relieved and started recovering from what happened.

Al-Sahal was in Oklahoma at the time the bombing occurred.

Al-Sahal recalled being threatened while in his own home.

Gun shots were fired at the Islamic Center, he said. Muslims in Oklahoma City lived in fear for a while, he said.

America was hit one year ago April 19 with what many are calling its most terroristic attack. Friday, the Collegian will review the bombing site and look at how the bombing affected K-State students, faculty and Manhattan residents.

► PARKING SERVICES

Tickets confuse Jardine residents

 Darren Whitley
 staff reporter

Jardine residents of International Drive found parking tickets on their vehicles Wednesday afternoon despite their valid parking permits.

"I think almost 90 percent of the people in this whole complex got tickets," Chris Thomas, sophomore in construction science, said.

The $15 tickets were for parking in the wrong area on International Drive, where buildings H, I, M and N are. The monitored area is directly in front of the apartments and is designated as primary parking for one car for each family apartment.

Day of remembrance

KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Friends and loved ones of Eric Dupuis drop flowers at a memorial to him Wednesday afternoon at the intersection of Anderson and Denison avenues. Anna Regier, far right, junior in business, finance and marketing and Dupuis' girlfriend, awaits her turn as the long line of friends file past.

Community reflects on life of student

 J. Scot Bucholz
 staff writer

Late Wednesday afternoon, the intersection of Denison and Anderson avenues was filled with life where death lingered after a fatal car-motorcycle accident that happened Monday.

Students, military, faculty and local residents were in attendance to celebrate the life of their friend, Eric Dupuis.

More than 100 people filled All Faiths Chapel for Dupuis' memorial service.

After the service, they visited the site of Dupuis' death.

"I know if Eric was looking through my eyes right now, he'd be happy to see how many people he has touched," said Anna Regier, Dupuis' girlfriend and junior in business, finance and marketing.

Armando Cardenas, Dupuis' roommate and sophomore in secondary education, said there were two things Eric wanted to accomplish.

"One, he never wanted his nephew to grow up without knowing who he was, and with all these people here, his nephew will never have to worry about that," Cardenas said. "The second thing was he wanted to go out riding his bike — and he did."

Rev. Don Fallon presided over the services.

"God loves us all, and he accepts our humanness," he said.

God did not take Eric from them, Fallon said.

"I believe God has been hurting and crying, just as we have been with Eric's death," he said.

Eric's mother, Judy Henson, said in a phone conversation with Rev. Fallon that Eric had a great sense and fondness for love.

A PASSION for Journalism

She sat uncomfortably, as journalists often do when on the other side of the notebook.

Small hands were clasped loosely on the fabric of the pink suit as she told of 36 years in journalism and 90 years of living.

Her wit and quickness belie all the stereotypes that come with aging, and she directed the interview with the expertise of one born to the craft — scolding after what she perceived to be a silly question and questioning the photographer about lighting and poses.

COLLEGIAN CENTENNIAL

Collegian celebrates 100 years with 3-day commemoration

BY PHIL KELLUM

This weekend marks the 100th anniversary of the Collegian.

About 250 current and former staff members, along with former and current advisers, begin the weekend-long celebrations tonight with a reception at the Manhattan Country Club.

The event has been booked for two years to ensure space in the K-State Student Union and Manhattan Country Club, said Gloria Freeland, associate director of Student Publications Inc. and Collegian advertising adviser.

Freeland is the coordinator of all the Centennial events.

A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications alumni were contacted beginning late last summer by mailings from the KSU Alumni Association, Freeland said. The mailing went out to 3,500 alumni, as well as former editors and staffers who were not journalism majors.

Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc. and Collegian news adviser, said it is difficult to underestimate how much the Collegian affects the University.

"More than 90 percent of the campus reads the Collegian every week. That's a very, very high readership," he said. "That really says something about how it informs and entertains and challenges opinions on campus."

There will be banquets Friday and Saturday nights. Friday's banquet is being associated with the Journalism and Mass Communications awards dinner, and Kathleen Kelly, K-State alumna and retired food writer for the Wichita Eagle, will speak.

SENATE APPROVES ANTI-TERRORISM BILL; HOUSE TO FINALIZE BILL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate overwhelmingly approved an anti-terrorism bill Wednesday — two days before the anniversary of the Oklahoma City bombing — after turning aside Democratic attempts to expand federal law enforcement powers.

The vote was 91-8 on the House-Senate compromise bill that will move to the House for final congressional action.

The legislation would limit federal appeals by death-row inmates and other prisoners and provide for the death penalty in certain international terrorism cases and for killing a federal employee because of the employee's work.

"We have a measure that will give us a strong upper hand in the battle to prevent and punish domestic and international terrorism," said Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole.

MINIMUM WAGE MIGHT GO UP

WASHINGTON (AP) — Moderate House Republicans broke ranks and joined Democrats calling for an election-year increase in the minimum wage, a vote Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., and other GOP leaders have tried to prevent.

An aide for House Majority Leader Dick Armey said Armey had no plans to schedule the bill for the floor.

▲ A younger Eula May Kelly stares from a photograph taken while she was a reporter for the Kansas City Star. While at the Star, Kelly interviewed Ruby Keeler, who married Al Jolson, and Amelia Earhart.

◀ As her fingers race through a scrapbook of memories, Kelly talks about her family. Kelly said 36 years as a writer was enough for her. "I'm in my 90th year, and I don't see well any more. I can read only with a magnifying glass," she said.

SCOTT M. LADD
Collegian

"You'll take a dozen and just pick one, I know," she said, as she sat in an antique chair by a window, the sunlight flowing through the snowy highlights in her hair.

Indeed, she does know her craft. Eula Mae Kelly began her journalism career at the Collegian during the 1920s and was editor-in-chief during spring 1928.

She then worked in a variety of jobs, from a Manhattan newspaper to the Kansas City Star, from freelancing during World War II to writing pamphlets for the U.S. Department of Agriculture. She continued to write during retirement until time took her eyesight from her, making her legally blind. She cannot read without a magnifying glass.

But before Kelly became a professional, her career began with the training she received at the Collegian. For her work on the twice-weekly newspaper, she was paid $6 an issue. The paper was printed at John Best's Aggieville print shop.

"After we put the paper to bed, we used to join hands and sing 'Praise the father, son and old John Best.' Wasn't that irreverent? Very collegiate," she laughed.

Kelly lived with her family and grew up the youngest of seven children on a farm east of Manhattan, in an area now called Knox Lane. So even though the paper was put to bed at night, Kelly didn't have to worry about being out of the women's dormitory after curfew. But she still chafed under some of the rules made by the dean of women.

"Skirts were short when I was in college, and some rolled their hose. Mary Pierce Van Zile was dean of women. And she made a ruling — an edict — that the bloomers must meet the hose. Isn't this comic? And I can remember I was some fresh, young sophomore, and somebody asked me about it. I wondered how she was going to enforce it," Kelly said with a laugh.

Some of Kelly's journalism training came from press teams, which were groups of students who went to other papers and worked for them for a week. Professor "Wisconsin" Brown, whose nickname came from the state he was from, started the program.

"The press teams went out to a weekly and edited," Kelly said. "I went to Marysville, and we did the Advocate. You were responsible, and we did everything."

"You just learned, and you had some help. We did the reporting, and the men did the advertising. It was very good for training. We learned a great deal."

The journalism class had a similar field project for the Topeka Capital-Journal.

"Every Kansas Day — this went on for years and years — the journalism class went to Topeka and did the Capital. You went down and reported on that particular day."

Kelly also remembered a bit of competition in the halls of Kedzie Hall.

"They counted inches in the Collegian, and they were posted every week. There was a Dwight King who was later on the Mercury, but he always got the most inches," she said, throwing her hand in the air.

In between the competition and work came some fun for the journalism students.

"The Scribbler's Scramble was a journalism dance, once a year. It was held in Rec Center, and we had some kind of a band. And Mr. and Mrs. Rogers, head of the journalism department, were the chaperones."

Kelly received both her bachelor's degree in journalism and her master's degree in English literature from K-State. Her father, who also owned a hardware store, died a few days after she graduated, so Kelly stayed with her mother and got her first professional job on the local newspaper.

After a year, Kelly moved on to the Kansas City Star during summer 1929. She got a job as an assistant on the daily women's page.

"Nell Sneed was the legendary editor, and I was her assistant for two years," Kelly said. "I remember I was there when the market crashed in '29. The skirts had been short, and the skirts went down with the market. It was interesting because I was kind of into fashion at that time."

Fashion interest aside, Kelly soon moved on to an opening on the city desk, where, among other things, she covered schools.

"There was only one woman on the city desk, and when she left, I came down one Saturday night and applied for the job. I was the only woman reporter on the staff of the city desk for five years."

Kelly wondered if students today had ever heard of some of the people she interviewed. She brought out an old green scrapbook, which holds photocopies of stories and clips from magazines. Spliced between book reviews and fashion stories are interviews with Amelia Earhart and Ruby Keeler, who was the wife of Al Jolson.

The words she chose for print all those years ago, were lyrical and descriptive. Kelly is a good writer. But she is sure no one today has heard of the women she interviewed in 1933.

"These are Kansas City Star stories that I did. Ruby Keeler, married to Al Jolson. I interviewed her. I interviewed Amelia Earhart. Amy Stemple McPherson. People you've not heard of."

"All of this is ancient history," she said with a sigh.

Kelly interviewed Earhart when she was in Kansas City giving a speech.

"After we put the paper to bed, we used to join hands and sing 'Praise the father, son and old John Best.' Wasn't that irreverent? Very collegiate."

Board members shouldn't wear two hats

Welcome back, journalism alumni.
This weekend marks the centennial celebration for the Collegian. Several hundred alumni will be returning to K-State to remember old times and celebrate 100 years of freedom of the student press at K-State.
Unfortunately, we will all be lucky if that freedom lasts for another year, much less 100.
Most students are aware the members of the Board of Student Publications and the staff of Student Publications Inc. had their share of communication problems and disagreements about content this year.
But there is another problem in the works. Aaron Otto, student body vice president-elect, is chair of the board. Patrick Carney, who was elected a student senator, might become a member of the board if Student Senate votes tonight not to accept those who violated election rules.
That leaves us with two members of student government on the board, a very clear and concise conflict of interest, especially when the issues of fees come up.

Imagine if President Nixon had control over the Washington Post in the '70s. There would have been no Watergate scandal and no President Ford. Not that we are comparing Otto and Carney to Nixon, but their presences on the board set a precedent.
We have already battled with some board members about the content of the Collegian. Imagine a future board filled with those in student government who feel they have the right to control content. The Collegian might become no more than a mouthpiece for student government.
With the new Student Senate being sworn in tonight, we urge them to amend the constitution. We want members of the judicial, executive and legislative branches of student government to be unable to serve on the Board of Student Publications.
Some would say they have no problem wearing two hats, one for the board and one for student government. We say you cannot wear those two hats unless you have two heads.

TOLES

Not that right-wing

If you are part of a hate group of any kind, please do not send me any more pamphlets.

Myview

WILLIAM THOMAS
Burdette

Apparently I have misled a few people into thinking I am a little more right-wing than I really am, because somehow I am on the mailing list for a group called the Heartland Revolutionary Guard.
Doesn't that sound like a nice little group of people? Do not let the name fool you. According to its fliers, it is a militant right-wing group of wackos.
I am not just saying they are wackos because they are to the right of Adolf Hitler. Nor am I saying they are wackos to be mean. I am saying wackos because I truly cannot think of a better word for a group of people who claim Bugs Bunny is a "Jew propaganda vehicle." No, I am not kidding. They actually sent me a pamphlet that said this:

"Americans are united in their demand for pogrom, the purge of liberal homo Satanists from the culture and the return to Biblical Values. We have had quite enough of the tyranny of 'animal rights.' The traitors threw wide the citadel gates to Lucifer with their Antichrist doctrine of Evolution — cornerstone in their orchestrated PLOT of dumbing-down the schools and destroying Civilization. Evolution elevates Man above God by lowering Man to level of animals. It is a vicious gory doctrine of 'survival of the fittest' — 'fitness' being 'adaptability to change.'"

Wait, it gets better.
"The eternal struggle between God and Satan is revealed in the Jew Propaganda vehicle of 'Bugs Bunny.' Elmer Fudd represents the White Christian Rifleman, steadfast and true to his moral code and Biblical duty: to purge the planet of the rabbit. His mission is merciful, the infidel rabbit is urged to say his prayers, to REPENT of his communist atrocities. Bunny is the symbol of the Jew Comedian, mocking all that is honest and principled and Sacred to the Lord ... Bunny has occult powers — documented PROOF of his covert alliance with Lucifer, he is thus pledged to the brutal oppression of Elmer. God's Order is blasphemed, the natural dominion of Man over the animals, the apes, the Negro ..."

Then it cross-references Genesis 1:28, as if that is justification for all of the crap this pamphlet spews out. There is more in the pamphlet, but if I type any more of it, I will probably puke.

This group is trying to spread hate in the name of the Lord, which is the worst case of blasphemy I have heard of since Jim Jones.

I have more than a few things to say to this group of right-wing, Hitler-loving, racist, anti-Semitic, completely-off-the-deep-end, Bible-misquoting, cartoon-watching (that appears to be the only level of intelligence they can relate to) Elmer Fudd fan club members.

But I am not the only person who has something to say to these people.

"The Lord says, 'These people come near to me with their mouth and honor me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me. Their worship of me is made up rules taught by men" (Isaiah 29:13).

God could not care less about what you say with your mouth. God sees our hearts, and obviously the only thing in the hearts of the "Heart" land Revolutionary Guard is hate.

Then there is the issue of evolution. Well, my God is too complex and magnificent to be explained by the fools in the Heartland Revolutionary Guard and too powerful to be written off by Darwinists.

In fact, I believe neither the Heartland Revolutionary Guard nor the advocates of evolution really understand the origins of the earth and of man. I do not think any of us really understand it. I think God wants it that way. But I am not about to limit my God by saying he is not capable of creating beings that can evolve and adapt to their surroundings. I believe he is so powerful that if he wants man to evolve, then man will evolve.

As far as "the purge of liberal homo Satanists from culture and return to Biblical Values," I think you have to understand Biblical values in the first place to return to them. "Biblical Values" have nothing to do with purging anyone from anything. Rather, biblical values are about trying to love our brothers and sisters in the godly way shown to us in John 3:16.

Let me try this again.
I am conservative. I am not Hitler. I am not Rush Limbaugh, and I am not Fred Phelps. I am not part of the NRA — in fact, I have never even held a gun. I have long hair and more earrings than most women, and if the Heartland Revolutionary Guard ever saw me, it would probably try to purge me from the earth along with Bugs.
If you are a member of a right-wing, militant hate group please go back to your compound, and count your guns or something. Whatever you do, leave me alone.

William Thomas Burdette is a freshman in journalism and mass communications, political science and international relations.

WINNERS SHOULD OBEY BASIC LAWS OF SOCIETY

Editor,
Did anyone else notice the leading vote-getters for arts and sciences and human ecology senators were also caught with MIPs to celebrate their victories last year? It's bad enough only 15 percent of the students show up to vote, but it is even worse we elect these people to be leaders in student government.
Being a leader means having responsibilities. If you choose not to accept them, you should not be rewarded. How can we choose people to make campus policy when they can't even follow the basic laws of society?

UNABOMBER IDEOLOGY NOT A RELIGION

Editor,
In his column "Home-grown terrorism," Jason Hamilton stated "the Unabomber is motivated by an ideology so irrational and convoluted that it might as well be a religion." I am not sure whether he just wrote this for its rhetorical value or it is really his idea that all religious ideals are "irrational and convoluted." Either way, it shows his poor understanding of religion.
The fundamental purpose of any religion is to inculcate good moral and ethical values. Prayer and religious rituals are aimed at developing self-discipline and fear of wrong doing in the individual. Religion ensures that we are gentlemen not because we have police officers, but because we have principles that we will not violate.
There are, of course, religious extremists, but thinking every religious person is a bigot is like thinking every liberal is a nudist.
Moreover, no religion advocates violence of any kind, let alone terrorism. People who do harm in the name of religion are just evil. So, Hamilton, the Unabomber's ideology cannot come close to being a religion.

Editor,
I was excited to see the article about Farrell's new Interlibrary Loan Memorandum on the front page of Tuesday's Collegian. However, I wanted to point out your errors in the article.

Interlibrary Loan's e-mail address is (ill@ksu.ksu.edu), not (ill@ksu.edu). The address for the libraries' web page is (http://www.lib.ksu.edu), not (http://www.lib.ksu.edu/farrell/remote/htm).

I think the address that you were attempting to list was for information on the new Local Catalog system, which is (http://www.lib.ksu.edu/remote.htm). You mistyped this address yet again in your article on page 3. And to take the cake, you ran a front page article on a new web service, yet didn't even mention the URL for this service.

Interlibrary Loan Memorandum can be found at (http://www.lib.ksu.edu/illm).

Overall, in two different articles about the library, you did not include open valid URL, and the only e-mail address you got right was the CNS consultants, who have nothing to do with the library. I've already received several pieces of e-mail today because of your incompetence from people who want to know when the URLs that appeared in the Collegian will be up and running.

I don't want to spend the next few days answering questions like these. I hope that you will pay a little more attention to this in the future. Mistakes of this type reflect very poorly on the Collegian and suggest that most of the staff is pretty much ignorant of the Internet and how to use it.

CHINA IS A MILITARY THREAT TO TAIWAN

Editor,
I am a Taiwanese and proud of that. When I read today's Collegian, I found an article, "Chinese community protests media coverage of Taiwan," drawing my attention to it.
What they claimed simply represents Chinese only but does not include Taiwanese. I think that the majority of Taiwanese are willing to be independent from China. If what they claimed is right, how about the wills of Taiwanese? Could Chinese force Taiwanese to accept what they want? It is no way to force people against their wills. The reason why Taiwanese government still sticks to the "dream" of unified China is the Chinese military threat. The most powerful obstacle for Taiwan to join the international community is from China.

The first truly Taiwanese president represents the first step to independence. And that is what those Chinese are afraid of.

After the separation for more than 40 years, there are lots of differences between Taiwanese and Chinese not only in democracy but also in economy, society and "culture."

This gap can't be sealed no matter what happens.

At last, I'd like to see an independent Taiwan in the future.

DON'T PUBLISH DUI CHECKPOINTS AGAIN

Editor,
I am shocked at the short-sighted reasoning you presented in your Friday editorial.

The way I see it, DUI checkpoints are to punish those people who are not responsible enough to designate a driver prior to every instance they consume alcohol, not just whenever they know there will be a checkpoint. If the idea here is to penalize those drivers who practice unsafe driving habits as a norm rather than an exception, I don't see how your publishing a checkpoint location is going to serve that purpose.

You also seem to be assuming that if people drink, they are going to drink until they get "sloppy drunk."

Two or three beers can impair your senses enough to make you a dangerous driver, and yet leave you sober enough to remember the formula for the volume of a cone.

I for one would not mind the inconvenience of traffic backups if it means the roads will be a little safer. I am sure there are many who share this view.

House proposes plan to fund scholarships

■ The STARS proposal is designed to use interest earned on state-idle funds

Bill Bontempo
staff writer

House Democratic Leader Tom Sawyer and Rep. Bob Krehbiel, D-Pretty Prairie, recently made a proposal to help fund higher education for most Kansas residents who wish to attend Kansas schools.

The Student Tuition Assistance Recognition Scholarship program proposal is designed to use the interest earned on state-idle funds to fund scholarships for Kansas residents.

Under the STARS plan, any Kansas residents attending a public or accredited private Kansas high school whose gross family income is less than $75,000 a year would be eligible for a scholarship if their cumulative grade point averages are 3.0 or higher.

Each semester $1,200 would be available per eligible student maintaining a 3.0 GPA.

Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said she is not confident the proposal will be passed in the near future. The next time the proposal has a chance for discussion is during the state legislative sessions April 24.

Hochhauser said the abundance of other legislation being discussed in legislature could postpone debates over the STARS program.

The STARS program is based on the HOPE (Helping Outstanding Pupils Educationally) program already in place in Georgia.

The HOPE program provides a tuition and fees waiver at public colleges and universities for eligible students, as well as a book allowance of up to $100 per quarter.

Brenda Hayes, manager of the HOPE program, said the program has been successful in improving many aspects of education.

Hayes said Georgia high schools have seen students with higher GPAs, and universities have experienced increased enrollment since the program began in 1993.

"It's a great program," Hayes said.

The HOPE program is funded by the Georgia Lottery for Education, a special state lottery designed to raise money for scholarships.

Earnings from the Kansas Lottery will not be used to fund the STARS program.

The idea of using Kansas Lottery earnings to fund the STARS program has met opposition from those who believe those funds should continue to be set aside for state economic development, Hochhauser said.

"There is clearly a debate," she said.

Hochhauser said she thought people should support the plan to use the interest generated by state-idle funds because it is a way to increase education funding without increasing taxes.

She said the STARS program needs support, and Sawyer and other house democrats are urging high school students and their parents to contact their senators to voice support for the legislation.

"It's an opportunity to assist Kansas working families who are being squeezed out of affording to send their kids to college," Hochhauser said.

In a recent survey of 8,726 high school juniors, 25.5 percent said making college affordable was the issue they found most important.

Thirty representatives signed the STARS program resolution designed to counteract the rising costs of higher education.

"People's ticket to economic success is education," Hochhauser said.

FOOTBALL

Lockett's words taken out of context

John Berggren
staff writer

Whoever said you can't take what is on the World Wide Web as fact was right.

As posted on the ESPN SportsZone home page on the Web at (<http://espn.sportszone.com/>), Kevin Lockett was glamorized as being not only a leader on the football field, but also off the field.

The article, written by Bruce Feldman, noted Kevin Lockett, the K-State all-American wide receiver, was responsible for "organizing a gathering with other K-State students to help improve safety measures for females on the Manhattan campus."

The supposed result of the meeting was the escort system that is in place at K-State.

The group also supposedly took on the name "Men Against Rape," which speaks to women's organizations to heighten awareness about potentially dangerous situations.

The props given to the highly touted receiver are great, but they are not true. Paul English, a sophomore in education, was actually the founder of the organization called Men Against Rape in Society (MARS).

"Kevin appeared on the poster we put together when we started this whole thing," English said.

"He was actually only there for about five minutes while the picture was being taken."

Lockett said Feldman for some reason changed the article to sensationalize Lockett.

"He turned the whole thing around to make it sound like I organized the whole thing," Lockett said.

"Me being a part of it was true, but I had nothing to do with the founding of it."

English said the article was a low blow to all the work he put into founding the organization.

"The thing that hurts most is the article doesn't bear anybody else's name except Kevin's," English said.

"I don't want to toot my own horn or anything. That's not the reason I'm making a deal out of all this."

English took the article to K-State athletic director Max Urick after noticing on the K-State sports information home page there was a direct link to the ESPN SportsZone website.

"We took it to the athletic department, and it did something," English said.

"They took the link off the home page the day I called."

"I don't want the athletic department to think this is some kind of personal attack on them. We were happy they took the link off the website as quick as they did."

Tigers hold off struggling Cats

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Jay White's grand slam capped a five-run sixth inning, leading Missouri to a 16-13 victory over K-State Wednesday.

Missouri (27-12 overall, 9-5 in the Big 8) jumped on K-State starter Chris Traylor in the first inning. Bryan Seymour singled, scoring two runs.

Will Mosley then got his first career home run to make it 4-0.

Aaron Jaworowski's two-run homer in the third inning was part of a three-run rally that put Missouri ahead, 7-1.

K-State (21-16, 5-9) scored three runs in the top of the fourth inning, including two off Scott Poepard's sixth home run of the year to cut the lead to 7-4.

The Wildcats rallied in the sixth inning, scoring seven runs and tying it at 11-11. The Cats sent 11 batters to the plate and collected seven hits off Missouri relievers Steve Brewster and Justin Stine.

Stine (2-0) held on long enough to get the win after Missouri answered in the bottom of the sixth with five runs — including White's — to make it 16-11.

K-State falls to MU, 13-16

SPRING FOOTBALL

Wildcats' offensive line returns capable starters

Shana McCormick
contributing writer

It is a fundamental concept for football — if a team is going to have any success on the offensive end of a game, it has got to start with the offensive line.

With a strong offensive front last year, K-State had a strong and balanced offensive attack. With the deepest numbers it has probably ever seen, look for the offensive line to lead the way again in 1996.

"The offensive line is as strong as it's ever been," offensive coordinator Dana Dimel said. "I feel comfortable with playing 10 to 12 guys on any given Saturday and having them do an adequate job."

With the line being so deep, both coaches and players know everyone has to work hard to keep their jobs.

"It makes for more competitive play in spring practices," Dimel said. "They know if you don't have a good practice, they could lose their positions."

Senior center Jason Johnson said he agreed.

"You get your opportunity, and if you don't take advantage of it, someone else could take it," he said.

Besides Johnson, guard Kendyl Jacox and right guard Ross Greenwood return as starters on the interior line. This could be the strength of the offensive line. Between the three, they have started 56 games in the last two seasons.

Johnson has quietly emerged as one of the most consistent centers in the league during the years. In the last two seasons, Johnson has been whistled for only two penalties. He led the team last season with 46 cut blocks.

"Jason has three main things going for him," Dimel said. "He bends his knees well, he runs well, and he's very intelligent."

Johnson said he just tries to fill his role in the offensive line.

"The offensive line complements each other. We all have our own individual roles," he said. "At center, I'm in the middle of everything, so I try to keep everyone focused and motivated."

Jacox has emerged as one of the most versatile linemen in the conference. Jacox has rotated between both guard spots and has also played some at the center position. Last season, Jacox only allowed one sack in 300 passing attempts.

But Dimel said Jacox's value to the team is more than his performance on the field.

"With Kendyl being able to play three different positions, he increases our flexibility on the line," he said. "That flexibility is a key ingredient that allows you to put your sixth-best man on the field."

just a great athlete."

Providing quality depth inside will be sophomore guard Jeremy Martin and senior guard Brian O'Neil. O'Neil started in games against Temple and Cincinnati last season. Martin made six starts, while Greenwood was injured last season.

"Jeremy's a great guy to coach because he loves the game and does everything you ask of him," Dimel said.

"Right now, he's our sixth guy, but he won't necessarily stay there."

Gone from last year's squad are starting tackles Chris Oltmanns and Scott Heun, but nobody on the Cats' squad doubts the ability of those waiting to replace them. Slated in those spots will be sophomore Ryan Young and junior Todd Weiner.

"Ryan and Todd are going to surprise some people this year," Dimel said. "Ryan played some last year, but not much. If they both continue to work hard, they will turn some heads."

Providing quality depth and competition on the line will be redshirt freshmen Damion McIntosh and Ian Moses. Senior letterman Toosavili Ulutu will back up Johnson at the center position.

Also look for David McIntyre, Chris Hess and Mike Munson to gain some playing time this season.

Don't disturb: Hockey fan in hibernation

If anyone has any complaints about this column or anything else I have written in this newspaper, do not bother looking for me at the office tonight.

It is spring, and that means it is time for the National Hockey League playoffs. I will be glued to my television starting at 8 p.m., watching my beloved Colorado Avalanche in the second game of its first-round series.

While hockey was once a sport that had a small, cult-like following in the central United States, I know I will not be the only person in the Midwest tuning in to a hockey game tonight.

Hockey, you see, has become the sport of the '90s. Just look in the surrounding area. At the beginning of the decade, ice was something you put in drinks if you were west of Chicago or south of Washington, D.C. Now hockey teams and fans abound across the nation.

Around this area, there the Kansas City Blades, who last season advanced to the championship round in the International Hockey League, the highest level of hockey outside of the NHL.

Farther south, the Wichita Thunder picked up the Central Hockey League championship last season, competing against teams from such traditional hockey hotbeds as Oklahoma, Tennessee and Texas.

To the north, there are the Omaha Lancers, a junior hockey team which has played in front of a packed house of more than 6,000 fans every game for six seasons.

Our friends at the University of Nebraska will get a chance to watch that same league next season when the Lincoln Stars begin competition in the same league.

Why has hockey become the hottest sport of the decade instead of basketball, as the predictions went?

Marketing.

The NHL has changed its image greatly during the past few years. The league no longer has the image depicted by the brutal comedy "Slapshot," which told the fictional story of a minor-league team that sold seats and won games by fighting.

Instead, the NHL has focused on the sport's stars, who have been plentiful in recent years. Players such as Sergei Federov, Peter Forsberg and Pavel Bure have marketing appeal as well as on-ice talent.

It is not just the talent that has turned things around, however. New teams in the South and West, including Anaheim, Calif.; San Jose, Calif.; Denver; Dallas; Tampa Bay, Fla., and Miami, have opened up a new audience for the league.

Hot colors and symbols, such as San Jose's teal and Anaheim's marketable Mighty Duck logo, have created interest at the youth level.

The NHL's effect on American sports culture may be felt as strongly to our west in Denver as it is anywhere. Once a city that was known for failing to support hockey teams at any level, Denver has become a hockey town.

After the expansion, the Denver Grizzlies won the IHL title last year, defeating Kansas City in the championship. Denver became the smallest city in the nation to have all four professional sports when the NHL's Quebec Nordiques headed south.

Amid predictions that the Denver market was too saturated to support four major-league sports franchises, the Avalanche proceeded to sell out every game since November.

Hockey is the hottest ticket in Denver. Avalanche clothing has popped up everywhere, and stores in the Mile High City carry more Avalanche apparel than any other team.

Perhaps the timing was right in Denver, as it was nationwide. The National Basketball Association, the NHL's main seasonal competition, has shot itself in the foot by changing the rules to make basketball a no-touch, all-whistle game.

Allowing its petulant stars to be bigger than the game has also hurt the NBA. Dennis Rodman, best known for his body art and ever-changing hair color, is harder for the average fan to relate to than Joe Sakic, a person who would not stand out on the street but is one of the best at what he does.

In Denver the downfall of the NBA is even more apparent. While the Denver Nuggets saw their playoff hopes come to an end Monday at the hands of the Sacramento Kings, the city was more concerned about the first playoff game for the Avalanche, which finished second in the Western Conference.

It was not any one factor that made hockey the hottest sport of the '90s. Instead, it was a combination of factors.

If you want to determine for yourself what factors were most important, check out the Blades next Friday, when they play their first home playoff game of the spring.

If you have to miss an NBA playoff game on television in the process, you will just be part of the nationwide trend.

Trevor is a freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications. Want to talk hockey? Send him an e-mail at (tgrimm@ksu.ksu.edu) But don't miss any games.

State and city legislators and members of state and federal transportation agencies cut a red ribbon during a ceremony to celebrate the near completion of the Kansas Highway 177 bridge Wednesday.

Bridge almost ready

■ City, state, federal legislators cooperate to make bridge a reality

Chris Oakley
staff writer

State and city lawmakers and members of state and federal transportation agencies joined the public Wednesday morning in celebrating the near-completion of a bridge on Kansas Highway 177 entering Manhattan.

David Geiger, federal highway administration division administrator, said the bridge was completed thanks to effort from city, state and federal legislators and taxpayer dollars.

"A lot of work and effort went into the planning, designing and building of this project," he said.

"It is something you all should be proud of."

He said Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., played a role in obtaining $3.2 million in federal funds for the project.

The ceremony, sponsored by the Kansas Department of Transportation and the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, was held on the new structure.

Two lanes of the four-lane bridge have been open for the past two weeks.

E. Dean Carlson, secretary of transportation, said the bridge will be completed in less than two weeks.

Construction on the bridge began May 5, 1994.

He said the old bridge, built in 1937, had needed repairs in 1978 and 1988.

"This thing was not doing well and had to be replaced," Carlson said. "I wondered when somebody was going to do something about this bridge as many as 20 years ago."

Carlson said if the new bridge had not been completed by June 1, it was likely the old bridge would have to be repaired again.

Dave Fiser, Chamber of Commerce chairman, said the bridge was a community effort.

"We're very pleased to have a big, new entryway into the city. A project like this isn't done in a day or week. It takes years," he said.

John Deering, executive vice president of Jensen Construction Co., the contractor of the $7-million structure, said the bridge is an example of modern design.

"It should serve the community well for the next 60 years as the old bridge did," he said. "Hopefully this bridge has a long and viable life and serves Manhattan well. I'm not just talking about Saturday afternoons when K-State has football games."

Deering said the bridge will be an economic asset to Manhattan.

"We recognize that just the construction itself pumps dollars into the city," he said.

Mayor Sydney Carlin said the old bridge made a large contribution to the economy of Manhattan.

"I wonder if the new bridge will make as large of a contribution as the old bridge," she said. "It's hard to place a value on the work people have done."

The width of the new bridge is 70 feet, compared with the old bridge, which was 24 feet wide.

About 1,620 tons of structural steel and 639 tons of reinforcing steel were used in the construction of the bridge.

The pier footings in the river are 40 feet below the river channel.

"Our south entry into Manhattan is now a modern construction," Carlin said.

"The door to Manhattan is now open in a beautiful way."

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Telefund draws donations from K-State alumni in 50 states

QUICKread

► Student volunteers participated in the Alumni Association Telefund that received $827,170. Most of the donations made were from the Midwest.

Tom Roesler
staff reporter

During February, volunteer students' participation in the KSU Alumni Association Telefund resulted in enormous success.

There were 21,227 pledges received worth $827,170 from alumni from the 50 states, Canada and Puerto Rico.

Another 12,390 alumni are considering making a pledge, Kirk Boughan, director of the Telefund, said.

The Midwest was the region from which most of the donations were made.

"A majority of our graduates are in Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Texas and Colorado, so I'd say more than half of the pledges came from that area," Boughan said.

Most of the volunteers for the Telefund were students from the University.

"Probably 97 percent were students. Another 2 to 3 percent were faculty," Boughan said.

All nine colleges at K-State, including the College of Technology at Salina, were represented at the Telefund by volunteers who spent time soliciting alumni.

Boughan said two colleges came each night to call alumni from their colleges for pledges.

Before their 3-1/2 hour session, the volunteers attended an orientation session lasting about 20 minutes.

After the calls were made, pledge envelopes were sent out to the alumni who committed money to the Telefund.

Boughan said most of the envelopes were returned, but many more are expected to come in.

"We received quite a few envelopes in late February, but we're still receiving several envelopes. That will actually continue through the summer," Boughan said.

Boughan said the money is used to support the students and the activities their colleges provide for them.

"The money is put into a general fund. A lot of those funds go toward school, and a lot of the pledges go toward special projects," Boughan said.

Boughan said some of the special projects the money will be used for are getting special speakers or funding special projects for classes.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics also participated in the Telefund by calling previous donors, but Boughan said the focus was definitely on education.

"Out of the 24 nights, two were for athletics. By far the emphasis was on the academics," Boughan said.

K-State's Telefund is different from other universities' Telefunds because most of the people involved are volunteers.

Boughan said many other universities hire students to work part time at their Telefunds, which can get expensive.

Because K-State uses volunteers, almost all the money pledged is kept for the students.

"The heart and soul of the Telefund is the volunteer students. We're able to return about 90 percent back to the colleges. We feel very fortunate that for 16 years we've had an all-volunteer campaign," Boughan said.

Because of the volunteers and the ability to keep most of the money donated, K-State is No. 1 in the Big 8 and in the top 10 nationally in percentage of alumni support.

A Thank You Letter

Last weekend, a friend taught me a lesson about confidence and I want to thank her. My friend is a beautiful, intelligent and loving person, but she has always lacked confidence in herself. Until very recently, one particular item of frustration for my friend in finding employment. Although a college graduate, she was uncomfortable applying and interviewing for positions because she felt she was either unqualified or the wrong type of person for the job. Unfortunately, the people closest to her did not provide the proper support and encouragement to convince her otherwise. Because she didn't need a job, she no longer tried to find one.

However, several weeks ago, changes occurred in my friend's life which forced her to seek employment. After a short search and several successful interviews, it appears that she may be able to choose from more than one position. She has told me that for once in her life she feels good about herself and walks into interviews knowing that she is the right person for the job. I am extremely happy for her.

I have a very different problem with self confidence. I already found that great job. My lack of confidence is in personal relationships. I find it very difficult to get close to others because I am afraid of not living up to the expectations that they may have had for me. If I feel that someone has found a flaw in my character or wishes for me to work on improving myself, I become defensive and pull away, rather than working out the issue of concern.

Like my friend, I am now in a position where I must change and must develop that confidence in myself, for through considerable effort, I have driven away the person that I wish to spend the rest of my life with. My reason? She wanted me to be more expressive of my love for her.

Because of my friend, I have the confidence to begin what may be an impossible task of earning back the love of someone I have hurt very deeply. Because of my friend, I feel that people can change at any time in their lives and that some just need a little greater incentive. Because of my friend, I feel that I can become a better person.

Thank you my friend.

Guest artist helps create 18th-century garb

Portia Sisco
staff writer

Grab your fans and opera glasses and go to Nichols Theatre for KSU Theatre's presentation of "The Country Wife."

"The Country Wife" is a restoration comedy written by William Wycherley. This period piece is set in London around the 18th century.

Guest artist Laura Robinson is visiting to help recreate the period costumes, designed by Dana Pinkston, assistant professor of speech.

Robinson is a cutter and draper. She takes designs from paper and turns them into patterns for the costumes.

"Sometimes a designer has an idea of what a character should look like. After casting, it's trying to make a person with an inappropriate body type fit that costume. Especially in college situations they tend to be thin and young and pretty, and in a show you need more than thin and young and pretty," Robinson said.

Many fabrics such as silk and brocade were used for these elaborate costumes.

"Yesterday my favorite costume was Harcourt. The fabric choice was good. It looks like the picture," Robinson said.

Harcourt's costume is made of several types of material, including blue velvet highlighted with gold material and a rich plume for his hat.

"The costumes are loosely authentic. Dana, the costume designer, wanted things that can be used in stock. They're roughly silhouette," Robinson said.

Robinson made a difference with the costumes, but you might not be able to tell the difference on stage.

"I believe the costumes would've looked the same without her. What she brought in was in the form of shop education, techniques and new ways of doing things that are good for us to see," Pinkston said.

Erin Mansur-Smith, graduate student in speech, plays the part of Lady Fidget.

Mansur-Smith said she likes her costume. "It's huge, and it's very elaborate, and I really like it. It's a beautiful creation but it weighs a ton," Mansur-Smith said.

The female actors will wear corsets, bloomers and petticoats to make their appearance more authentic.

"It was a little scary at first. We'd worked with the corsets before. It messed up the motions and the lines," Mansur-Smith said.

This was a research-intensive play that involved studies in language and movement.

Female actors had to learn how to use their fans properly and how to communicate with them.

Some of the actors also used dialect tapes to learn authentic speech patterns.

"The language can be a little difficult. There can be so much sexual innuendo," Mansur-Smith said.

"You have to play a certain attitude with it."

LITERATURE

Storyteller to entertain with comic, tragic tales

QUICKread

► Mark Spencer, professor at Cameron University in Oklahoma, will read portions of his works at 4 p.m. today in Union 212.

Jessica White
staff reporter

A Midwestern author described as vastly entertaining will visit K-State Thursday to read his fiction.

Mark Spencer, author of "Love and Reruns in Adams County," will read his fiction at 4 p.m. today in Union 212.

The reading is free and open to the public.

"Mark's a great storyteller," said Steve Heller, professor of English and chairman of the creative writing program, "and I think it's a real eye-opener for students who aren't necessarily students of literature."

Heller said he would call Spencer a regional realist because he writes about southern Ohio, where he is from, and sometimes about Oklahoma, where he lives now.

"He writes about the class of people who live in trailer parks," Heller said. He said the stories often contain working-class, blue-collar people who seldom have college degrees but have great dreams and high hopes that often vanish.

"His stories are often comic and tragic at the same time," Heller said. "We see people suffering terrible defeats, and we're laughing the whole time."

Spencer is a professor at Cameron University in Oklahoma and won the Patrick T. T. Bradshaw Book Award in 1988.

His novel, "Love and Reruns in Adams County" will be on sale at the reading for $3.99 and can be autographed by Spencer.

Mark Spencer is one of a series of writers who have been brought to campus this semester through the visiting writers program funded by the Fine Arts Fee and sponsored by the Department of English and the creative writing program.

The last visiting author in the series will be poet Michelle Basseau, an assistant professor at the University of Missouri-Kansas City. The reading will be at 4 p.m. Monday in Union 212.

REVIEW

Sight-seers combine classic overtones, funky lyrical prose

Bill Bontempo
 staff writer

The Sight-seers grew up together in Tallahassee, Fla., and traveled along the East Coast in search of fame.

The band found a home in Atlanta, Ga., in 1992 and a label to produce a record for them. Brendan O'Brien, who produced work for Pearl Jam, founded the Shotput Records label and took a chance on the funky off-beat pop sounds of the Sight-seers.

"Fun-seeking with The Sight-seers" is as good a first album as those produced by bands who have become more popular. The Sight-seers combine a retro-'70s funk beat with a more modern alternative sound to create an unmistakable sound.

At times the album sounds like "Blood, Sugar, Sex, and Magic," by the Red Hot Chili Peppers, but at other times it is too mainstream.

Tracks like "Gimme Five" really move and showcase the band's ability to combine funk and classic pop.

Zollie Maynard's hypnotizing vocals combined with the soft rhythms on "The Blood River" are a good example of the passion the Sight-seers have for their music. Maynard's voice is perfect on this track for conveying the theme of maintaining friendship during hard times.

If you hear a trace of R.E.M. on "Blood River" and "Taken for Granted," it can be traced to the early influence of R.E.M. on the band.

The more contemporary-sounding tracks like "Away (Gone For Good)" and "Recline" would probably be the most marketable songs for radio and could easily be played on pop and contemporary stations. These tracks are also the least appealing tracks on the compact disc.

They are good songs, but the sound is already overplayed on mainstream radio.

"Horny Toad" is one of the best tracks, combining blues themes of bad luck with funky overtones and Brad Lewis' off-beat drum rhythms.

"Draggin' The Main" is an upbeat, rollicking rock 'n' roll tune that is nothing but fun. The lyrics on "Fun-seeking with The Sight-seers" are poetic and simple.

From "Taken for Granted" you hear lines like "Loveless we are suspended / and with you I'd try another time / wise up and never sacrifice your soul / find your freedom inside." Other tracks also display clever lyrical prose and serious themes surrounding love, which is a popular theme for all music.

Overall the album focuses on wild partying and letting loose, a theme more common to a young audience and anyone who has ever had a night on the town.

A line from "Draggin' The Main" is "If we ever get caught it won't mean a whole lot / in one ear and out the other 'til someone dies / polish off that liquor / drunker than hell, drunk, drunker, drunker."

Lines like these are more prevalent than the introspective lines, but they are no less effective at creating good music. If you liked the music of the 1970s that did not embrace the disco sound and you like the alternative sounds of modern music, then you will appreciate the Sight-seers' first CD, "Fun-seeking with The Sight-seers."

One year after the bombing, Al-Sah said he understands what happened in Oklahoma.

"What happened shows that terrorism has no nationality or religion," Al-Sah said.

What happened in Oklahoma is a tragedy no human would approve of, he said.

"Muslims share the mourning of the families who lost people in this bombing," Al-Sah said.

Mohammed El-Faki, previous president of the Muslim Student Association, said everything went back to normal a few weeks after the bombing.

"Nobody would accept something like this to happen whether here or anywhere," El-Faki said. Muslims are part of this society, he said.

"Everybody is sailing in the same ship, so we have to take care of that ship — all of us — whether American or not," El-Faki said.

El-Faki said Muslims feel whatever the society feels — good or bad.

Jawad Al-Hazim, senior in architectural engineering, said the bombing made many people uncomfortable.

"Everybody was shocked, Muslims and non-Muslims," Al-Hazim said.

What happened to Muslims in Oklahoma was due to anger and frustration, he said.

"Now that a year has gone by, I think everybody feels bad for what happened and for all the children that died," Al-Hazim said.

There are no feelings of hate or anger in the Islamic community toward the people who accused Muslims, he said. Islam is not about hate and anger, but it is about peace and kindness, Al-Hazim said.

For the U.S.D.A., Kelly compiled information for recipe pamphlets. Home economists worked in Bellsville, experimenting with updating recipes. Kelly put the information into pamphlet form. She was a bit sarcastic as she remembered the types of pamphlets.

"We did a series called 'Pork in Family Meals,' 'Beef in Family Meals,' 'Cheese in Family Meals,'" she said with a laugh.

The work was a bit dull, Kelly remembered. But that did not matter, because it is important to have a profession you enjoy, she said.

"I've always loved to write, so I was in a profession I really enjoyed." She does not miss writing, saying 36 years was enough. But she spent some of her time at the Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community compiling information and writing pamphlets.

"Since I came here, there had been a great deal of accumulation of history. I edited it. I can't say I wrote it," Kelly said. "But I put it together. There was a great pile of information, but no journalist had ever worked on it."

She did, however, write a pamphlet describing the collection of artwork at Meadowlark.

It seems old loves die hard. Of course, old habits die hard as well. As the goodbyes were said and the hands shook, another snap of the camera brought this response from the woman who used to set shots up for photographers: "I was fixing my ear. I'm sure that was a good one."

BANQUET

The keynote speaker for Saturday's banquet is Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., who is a graduate of the journalism school.

"Saturday's lunch will be a highlight. It's where the current advisers and former advisers are going to take part in a great discussion," Johnson said.

"It's going to be fun. War stories will be flowing freely," he said.

Permit stickers
Residents of Jardine Terrace Apartments who own parking permits for International Drive need to go to the Thomas J. Frith Community Center to pick up an additional sticker. For more information, call Susi Tunstall at the center at 539-2097.

JARDINE

Parking at the end of the street is intended for the second family cars.

Residents were to have a sticker designating their car as primary or secondary.

"I did not know we had to have a certain ticket for primary and secondary," Becky Bauman, Jardine resident, said.

Thomas, who has been a resident of the H building since January 1995, said,

"At housing today, they said, 'It has been all over the place. We sent you a newsletter. It's been down on notices all over the place.' I did not see this."

Communication between the Department of Housing and Dining Services and the residents was confusing.

"We were told about it when we moved in, but we did not know we were supposed to have a sticker on our permit," Jamie Sledd, senior in pre-physical therapy, said.

Before Parking Services issued tickets Tuesday, Harold Ward, senior in bakery science and management, figured out he had to have the sticker.

"The way we found out about those stickers is we just happened to see a couple of other cars with them," Ward said.

"I thought we had better check and see what that was all about," Ward said.

Ward said he was also confused about who was supposed to have the sticker.

"The way it was worded, it made it sound like it was for families with two cars," he said.

Lesa Hiebert, senior in geography, passed some of blame Parking Services.

"It was pretty confusing. I mean, I had no idea. They did not make that very clear when I stood in line for an hour to get my parking sticker back in August when I enrolled for this last year," she said.

Ward and Thomas also had opposite views of the problem.

"I am glad that they have got it, because we have got a parking problem here. It is not that there's not enough parking here. It is just that a lot of people park here that should not be parking here," Ward said.

Thomas said he thought otherwise.

"I don't understand why it matters at all. Most everybody's paid for parking, so who cares?" he said.

Parking Services began enforcing the policy when signs went up at the end of last summer, Dwain Archer, director of Parking Services, said.

"What we are trying to do is to have people to not be selfish and park all of their cars in one area," Archer said.

Other residents were angry that Parking Services was even troubling with it.

"It made us mad, because we have never had any problems at all the whole year we have lived here," Sledd said.

Thomas said he guessed the parking policy had been in effect for a little while.

"They haven't done anything about it until they came today. This is ridiculous," he said.

Archer said Parking Services employees know to send Jardine residents to the Frith Community Center to get the primary and secondary stickers from Susi Tunstall, coordinator of family housing.

Tunstall chose not to comment.

Principles hold true today

WELCOME

Ron Johnson director of Student Publications Inc.

Welcome to the Collegian's centennial edition.

A century ago, students at Kansas State Agricultural College grew tired of administrative control. They launched their own newspaper, the Students' Herald, and they pledged to serve their fellow students:

"We will endeavor to bring the students into closer touch with the public, stimulate their literary genius and advance their interest in every other way we can," editor J.W. Holland and business manager G.G. Boardman wrote in their inaugural edition of Jan. 8, 1896.

"It will be our purpose to speak as the voice of the students on all occasions. Where there is need of improvement, we want to be found. Where there is work to be done, we want our hand to be at the wheel.

"Where the students' interests are involved, we will exert every effort to secure justice."

Those lofty principles have a familiar ring in 1996. The Collegian editors I have advised during the past seven years didn't realize it, but their goals have been amazingly similar to those 1896 founders.

Sometimes, they reach those standards. Sometimes, they don't. But their long hours and hard work provide a special gift for their fellow K-State students — an excellent vehicle of news, information, entertainment and commentary through one of the nation's most honored college newspapers.

This special section is a testament to a century of commitment. We hope you enjoy it.

WELCOME

Gloria Freeland associate director of Student centennial coordinator

Welcome back to K-State, and welcome to the student newspaper's centennial celebration.

As a former Collegian managing editor and staff writer in the 1970s, and now as the advertising adviser, I can say many things have changed, and yet many things have remained the same at the Collegian.

Through wars, floods, newsprint shortages and other trying times, the students have maintained high standards for their newspaper. And, although the technology has changed dramatically, the students still have the same fire, the same energy, the same idealism they've always had.

And, the full-time staff members, the advisers and the professors through the years all have had a part in contributing to the success of the student newspaper.

Their guidance has provided the continuity which has kept the newspaper going for 100 years.

The centennial is a double celebration for me — a chance to see all my fellow Collegianites from the 1970s, and a chance to see the dozens of students I have taught and advised since I returned to Student Publications in 1983.

It's a time to reminisce, to laugh, to reflect on where we've been and to think about the future.

This special centennial edition of K-State's student newspaper is a snapshot of the past 100 years.

We hope you enjoy it for years to come.

Nothing ever changes at K-State

'm a packrat at heart. I never throw anything away.

Buried in the bowels of my mother's house are box after box of my school papers, stuffed animals, Barbies, paintings and drawings, protractors, compasses and anything else that reminds me of my childhood.

I'm building a similar collection in my apartment. This time, however, a majority of the stuff is related to Kedzie Hall.

I have reams of newspapers. Every newspaper we printed for the past four semesters is in boxes in my closet, along with odds and ends from conferences, programs and party favors from the Student Pub banquet and photos from photog friends.

It wasn't until we started putting together the Collegian centennial celebration that I realized I'm not alone in my tendency to collect.

Alumni from all over the country sent us clippings, photos and memorabilia. I've talked to so many people who told me fascinating stories. I've looked at hundreds upon hundreds of past Collegians. And one thought has remained with me for weeks — nothing ever really changes at K-State, and the newspaper staff at Kedzie Hall has remained a constant.

Parking has been debated on this campus since cars were invented. The quality of teaching has always been a source for debate. The lack of classroom space and the little respect K-State receives compared with the University of Kansas has been discussed for 100 years.

It seems the old saying about history repeating itself is correct. The issues we get so passionate about today, and the stories the Collegian covers, are the same issues and stories from 50 years ago. The names and faces have changed, but the passion remains the same.

The constant for the last 100 years has been the Kansas State Collegian. Sure, it was originally the Students'

Herald and briefly the K-State Aggie, but the mission and the feeling behind the nameplate have remained the same — to serve the students.

Every semester has begun with a new staff rededicating itself to serving the students. We do it for many reasons.

First, this has always been the students' newspaper, with its success or failure relying on students. We have always tried to make sure the needs of the student body are met.

Second, we learn good journalism skills here. Alumni rave about the quality of education they received here and how the Collegian was great practice for the "real world." That tradition continues today. In fact, in terms of practical experience with computer equipment, some students here are far ahead of the professionals.

Last, we do it because we love it.

Whether it was the adrenaline rush from thwarting the administration, the friends made or the bonding over late-night deadlines, alumni have said some of the best times of their lives were here in Kedzie Hall. I'm sure in 30 years, the current staff will feel the same.

As we meet those alumni here for the reunion this weekend, we'll find common ground with those who graduated many years ago.

Everyone had late nights and production problems. Everyone sacrificed at least one class every once in a while to hunt down a story. Everyone worked for many more hours than their pay indicated. And some of the Kedzie Kapers were the stuff of legends.

I would like to thank Pat Patton and Tony Crawford at University Archives for all the help in putting this edition together. Their help was invaluable.

I would also like to thank all the alumni who took the time to send things and talk to me on the phone. This edition couldn't have been put together without your stories.

I hope you enjoy reading about our first 100 years. We'll see you in 2096.

Stephanie Fuqua is a senior in journalism and mass communications and is the editor of the Collegian centennial edition.

K-STATE PRINTING SERVICES

In the beginning

It began with an idea.

Create a medium dedicated to the students because the true student voice was not being heard on campus.

It is likely that neither the first editors, nor the 550 students at tiny Kansas State Agricultural College, dreamed their efforts would survive a century.

Prior to 1896, students had participated in writing news for The Industrialist, a college-sponsored newspaper President John Anderson established to give practice to printing students.

However, the work was controlled by faculty members, who often only gave students the society news to report on. The first editors of the Students' Herald felt the work was too limiting, and began the Students' Herald Publishing Company in 1896. The first issue was printed Jan. 8, 1896, and continued to print weekly on Wednesdays.

Students regularly enrolled in college were allowed to be stockholders, with a cap set at 150 students. The shares, which were non-transferable and limited to one share per student, cost 25 cents per term.

The first editors had three objectives in mind for the paper: to improve the students; to advance the college literary societies; and to advance the reputation of K.S.A.C.

Other goals were "to speak as the voice of the students on all occasions. Where there is need of improvement we want to be found. Where there is work to be done we want our hand to be at the wheel. Where the students' interests are involved we will exert every effort to secure justice."

As time has slipped through history, it is obvious that Manhattan and K-State have changed. But today's students would hardly recognize the atmosphere and attitude that reaches from the pages of the Herald.

Society news mentioned names that now grace campus buildings — Mrs. Kedzie, President Fairchild and professor Willard.

Professors often held parties at their homes for their students.

Most students belonged to the literary societies, which met weekly to discuss literature. This news was a main staple of the newly-created paper.

"News" stories were not news as we know today. Often, they were just one-sentence or one-paragraph briefs, separated by lines. Students were identified by graduation date (not year and major), and men were identified by initials or first initial and last name.

The following "stories" were printed in the first edition:

Regent Hoffman was seen about college this week.

C. B. White takes up college work again this term.

Elizabeth Edwards '92 spent her vacation in Manhattan.

O. H. Halstead, '91, was seen about the streets last week.

J. G. Hanes, first-year in 1893-4, returns to college this term.

A. K. Hanes, after three years of teaching, returns to college.

A large number of new students swell the college roll this term.

books. Your trade solicited."

Other ads included Johnson's Dentilave — "To Cleanse, to Beautify, to Preserve the Teeth" and included sugar cured hams, which sold for 10 cents a pound.

Another sign of the times was printed on page four. An actual story of some length described the demand for an eight-hour work day. "This demand for a shorter day is not an endeavor on the part of the laborers to get out of work. It is a demand for a broader life."

By issue No. 2, the editors had determined a motto for the paper: "Let every one cultivate his own genius."

Of course this motto reflected the role of women on campus. Most of the students were men; it was assumed that women came to college to look for husbands. For the first few semesters, men ran the paper, except for a few women who were society editors. Non-Caucasian students were also scarce on campus as the second edition spoke of "A bright looking colored lad enters first year classes this term."

This issue also reprinted stories from other area papers that commented on the Herald. Page 2 was the editorial page, and in this issue was the first letter to the editor, which commended the editors for the first issue of the paper.

Page three was dedicated to the societies, a practice which would grow burdensome in later years. This particular page contained minutes from the Lonians, a women's club.

The minutes contained

Issue No. 6

■ "First and second years have meetings to determine class colors."

■ One editorial announced how the graduation exercises in May would be conducted. Each student was to read an extract from a thesis prepared for the occasion. Students were each given five minutes to read.

■ Another editorial discussed a regent's decision to adopt a recommendation that Monday be a day off, and classes be conducted on Saturday. The faculty were behind the proposal, citing students who were too tired to study on Friday, resulting in poor grades, and they objected to studying taking place on the Sabbath. These reasons were met with great protest by the editorial board, who stuck up for the students who work on Saturday and like to go home for the weekends.

Issue No. 18

■ "The farm department has purchased a new binder and expects to harvest a big wheat crop in a few weeks."

The later years of the 1890s also proved to be uneventful in the management of the newspaper. The editorial board became increasingly concerned with the manners and proprieties of the student body. Women were urged to be ladies, and the men were scolded for wearing their hats inside campus buildings.

In the fall of 1897, the motto was changed to: "A paper for the students, by the students and of the students." This motto would last for several years.

That fall an announcement was made that the paper would be issued from the college printing office, with the mechanical work done by students. The editors hoped to produce a better-quality paper that semester.

"It is expected that in the near future, the artistic appearance of the paper will be improved."

The fall of 1898 saw the printing of the first photograph in the paper, which was a general view of buildings on campus. Also that semester, stockholders were urged to patronize only the stores that advertised in the Herald. "Stockholders, read the advertisements and know where to head. It is not right to boycott, but it is right that we give those who help us our best patronage."

In the fall of 1899, the newspaper was changed to a magazine format. Besides extensive society and department news, coverage was often devoted that year to the lack of school cheers. The newspaper held a contest for a school cheer, with the following being the winner.

"Jay Rah! Gee Haw!
Jay Hawk! Saw!
K.S.A.C.
Kaw! Kaw! Kaw!"

The students, of course, were properly enthusiastic.

The Teachers' Association of Riley county held their annual meeting in the Methodist church. Pres. Fairchild delivered an address—Ramblings in Texas. Other interesting features filled out the program.

At the thirty-third annual meeting of the Kansas State Teachers' Association held at Topeka, Dec. 25-29, four names from Manhattan appeared on the program: President Fairchild, O. E. Hale, Sept. C. G. Swingle and G. D. Wailes.

Mr. M. H. Williams, first year '93-4, and Miss Julia S. Williams, first year '94-5 were married at the home of the bride's parents, near Edgerton on Jan. 24. The young couple will make their home on Mr. Williams' farm in Lehigh county.

Geo. Forsyth, '95, writes from Nashville, Ind., of a delightful trip through the south, first visiting Mammoth Cave then Lookout Mountain, viewing the historic battle of Missionary Ridge and Chattanooga, and on to the Exposition at Nashville, Tenn.

Fourth year students, who are preparing a list of names for the list of names of the students of the college, have been very busy. The list is now being compiled, and will be ready in a few days.

Five college boys and one loaner came up from the K. U., were coming down the same train together the other day, on their way to the college. The loaner was a little, but very much interested in the college. It is only approximately right.

1900s

Decade sees changes in growing paper, including name

The decade began with a new look for the Herald, but by 1906, the paper was floundering.

An editorial printed in 1920 insinuated that the business managers of the Herald during the beginning of the century often pocketed the advertising money, leaving the paper with debts. If this is true, no mention of this was ever printed in the many editorials, articles and doomsday predictions printed in the Herald in 1906.

In January, the editors requested the literary societies to pay $4 per term for the use of space. The editorial reasoned that typesetting was taking up too much time and costing too much money.

By February, another article cited the problem of people paying their subscriptions. In the past, short, polite, one-line reminders were sprinkled throughout several editions of the paper. This time, however, financial need brought out the full (though still polite) fury of the editors:

"Customer notification has failed to bring a response," they wrote. "Each issue of the paper costs many hours of thought and work, and the income, when all collected, barely pays its bills, leaving little to salaries. Contrary to popular belief, the editor and business manager won't leave the paper in debt."

The editor once again asked the literary societies to financially back the paper, because of the enthusiastic backing given to the societies.

"If the stockholders and subscription lists included half the society numbers, there would be no occasion to call for assistance and cooperation from the societies as organizations."

By March, an article reported that stockholders might be assessed to improve the quality of the paper. The editors suggested all stockholders attend a meeting, and if they didn't care, to turn their stock back to the publishing company.

Unfortunately, subsequent issues in the spring say nothing about the outcome of this meeting, the finances of the paper or stockholders' responses.

However, by September, the editors once again reported the stockholders would meet to decide if they could continue publishing.

This time, the paper reported the outcome of the meeting.

"In our last issue, a doubt was expressed as to whether or not the Herald would be continued during the coming year. We are now glad to be able to announce that the paper will publish the same as before. The students, both old and new, have responded with considerable alacrity to our call for cash, and the Herald is in much better shape than it has been in a long time."

"The new staff members have not yet been elected, and we can say nothing as to the policy which will be pursued during the years. This to know, however: The Herald will continue to support every organization and movement which, in the opinion of the staff members, will help advance the interests of the students and the college.

The problem seemed to be solved until October, when the paper decided not to publish literary society news.

"Last year, when the Herald was in bad shape financially, we asked the literary societies to help us out a little by paying a moderate amount for the space they use each week," they wrote. "Although they did not question the good which the Herald did for them, they were not willing to reciprocate, and in all but one or two cases the request was not granted. They were glad to have the Herald help them but were unwilling to help the Herald in return."

"Some people said that the society reports which were inserted each week were of more benefit to the Herald than to the societies. We do not believe this, so we have decided to discontinue the weekly society reports. We do not do this in a spirit of retaliation, but we do it because we believe we can fill the space with matter which will be more interesting to our readers in general."

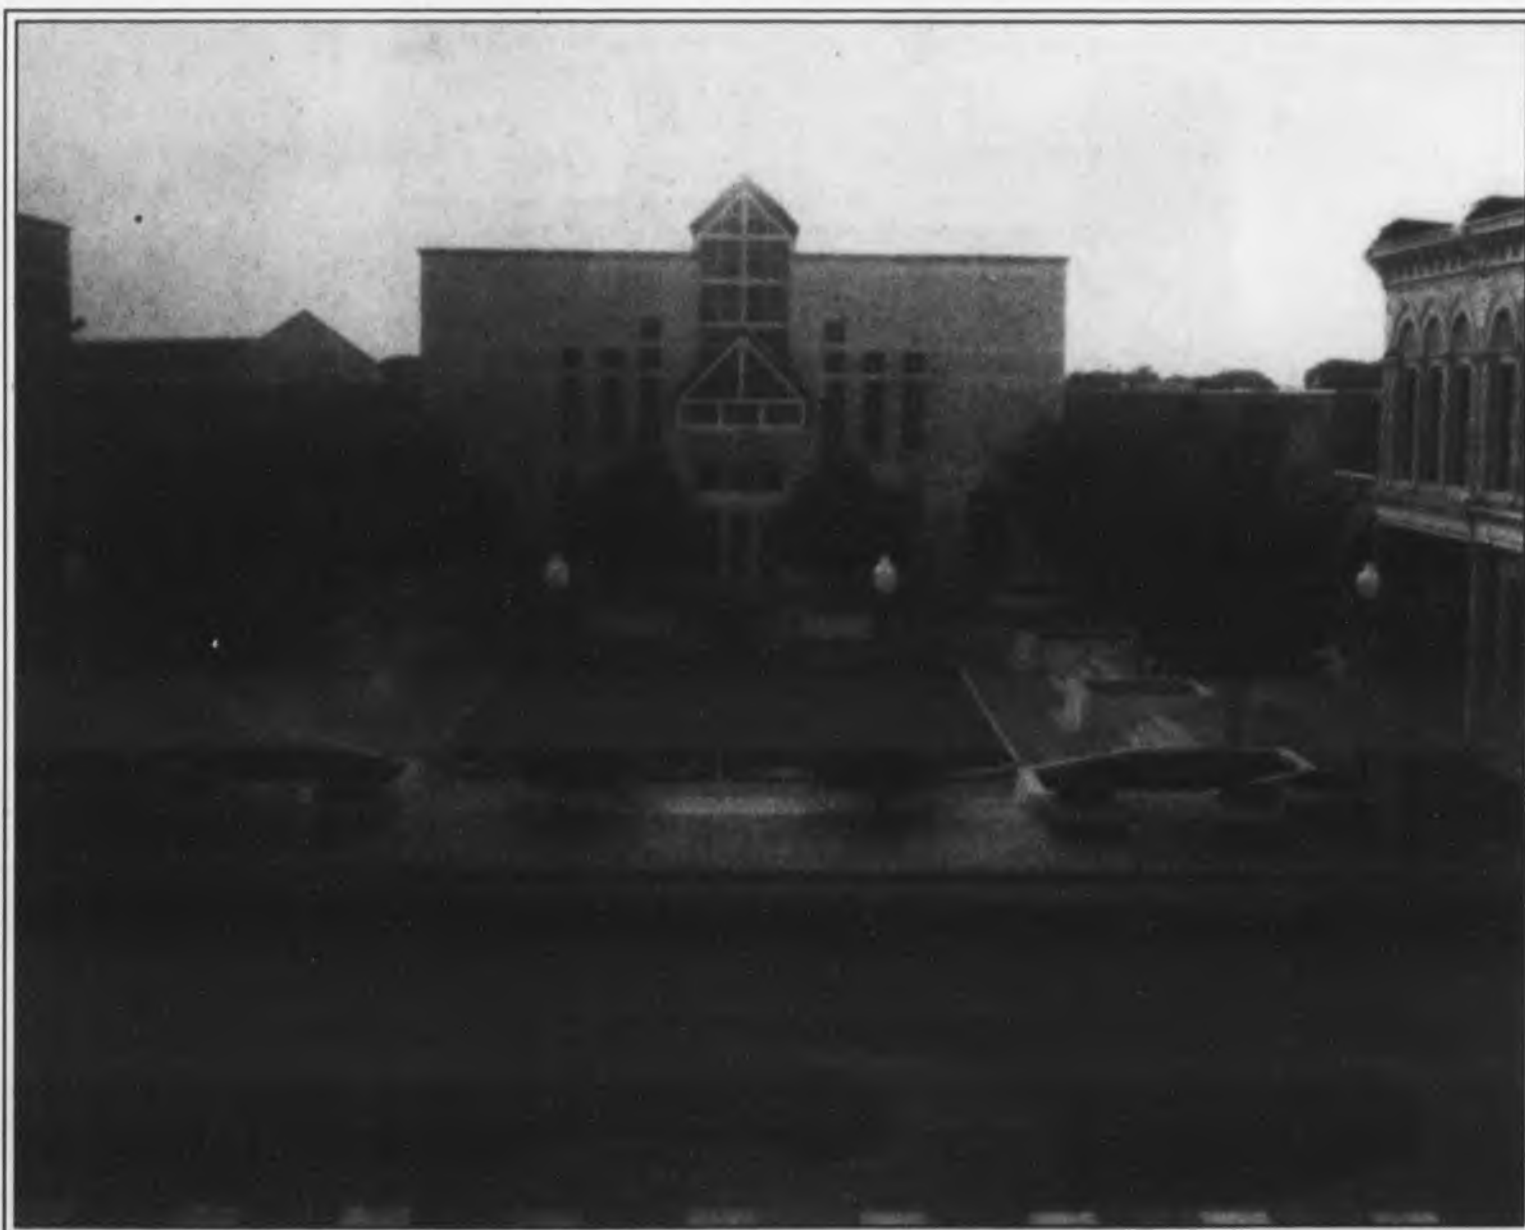

The article went on to say the editors would still publish articles about special programs and receptions, but unless "someone presents sufficient argument to show us that we are wrong, the society reports will not appear after this week."

Even though the editors said this was not retaliatory, given the previous doomsday predictions that the paper was going to fail, one has to wonder if this wasn't another effort to get the societies to pay for their space.

By December, the final warning of financial mismanagement was printed.

"In a few days, a meeting of the Herald's stockholders will be held, at which

1910s

Name changed to Kansas State Collegian

Coverage in January 1910 began with the editorial staff clamoring for a student hospital on campus.

In the wake of several epidemics that swept through the ranks of students and caused classes to close, students began to discuss the need for an infirmary on campus.

The staff also editorialized at length about two "girls" who ran for Student Council. The staff seemed to be suspicious that the women were counting on the male vote simply because they were women.

An editorial cautioned the men: "This is not a lamentable state, but be advised by other classes in choosing. Don't choose out of chivalry."

With the end of the semester, elections for the Herald staff arrived, and it ran into a problem that later staffs have echoed — the lack of candidates to pick from.

"It's the same old story and a sad one. Instead of having a long list of candidates to pick from, as is the case in staff elections of most college papers, the Herald Publishing Co. almost has to draft men to work on the college paper."

This lack, however, might have been in response to the editor, whose policy was not to print letters to the editor. He wrote in an editorial that "bits of nonsense" of student opinion wouldn't be tolerated or printed.

News coverage for the next few years was uneventful, until the students of 1912 were treated to a campaign visit from Theodore Roosevelt. On April 20, he stopped at the Union Pacific depot, on a campaign tour by train. About 5,000 people, many students in the Republican campus organization, gathered to hear his 10-minute speech.

Woodrow Wilson, Roosevelt's Democratic opponent, didn't make it to Manhattan until Oct. 9. His 10-minute speech, which came two hours behind schedule, was welcomed by a crowd of 3,500 people. Unfortunately, the train pulled away before he was able to finish his speech.

The Wilson Club and the T.R. Club got heavy coverage prior to the Nov. 6 election. Both clubs had debates and mock elections. However, after the election there was no mention of the winner, Wilson.

Fall 1912 brought the first of many new looks and changes to the Collegian during this decade. This incarnation had smaller ads on the front page, as well as smaller type and a different headline font.

This semester also began with a contest for news subscribers. Students were urged to sell subscriptions to the paper to their friends. The winner of the contest would get two season tickets to football, basketball and baseball.

On April 12, 1913, the paper was renamed the Kansas Aggie. The shareholders of the Students' Herald Publishing Co. adopted a new constitution which changed the name, among other things.

Under the new constitution, every subscriber was given stock in the paper. People wishing to become members of the staff had to have a petition signed by 25 percent of the stockholders to "be a legal candidate."

The stockholders were then responsible for voting on the candidates for editor.

The staff explained the name change as this:

"The name of the paper is changed to the Kansas Aggie for several reasons. It is not meant as a criticism on those who started the paper way back yonder and made it a mighty interesting paper. But the name 'The Kansas Aggie' stamps the paper with an identity that will make it known wherever it is seen. The Kansas Aggie is an expressive term. It expresses a big school and premier athletic teams. There can be no hesitations to where the paper comes from. Besides, the name has 'pep'."

However, this image of the paper only lasted a year. By April 1914, another new constitution was submitted, and the name was changed to the Kansas State Collegian.

"The purpose of this paper shall be to represent truly the student body of the college, and shall not be controlled by or published in the interest of any particular faction of said student body."

A Collegian board was established with 26 members — that was one person from each class, society, fraternity and sorority.

The first issue of the paper under the Collegian nameplate printed stories about "Jack the peeper," who was caught looking into sorority houses, the loss by the tennis team, the planning of the May festival and the baseball team's game against Haskell College.

▲ The paper was renamed the Kansas Aggie on April 12, 1913.

► By April 1914, another new constitution was developed, and the paper was again renamed, this time the Kansas State Collegian.

several vacancies on the staff will be filled. Several plans will be discussed by which, it is hoped, the publication of the Herald can be continued. This last statement may come as something of a surprise to most people, but it is the truth just the same.

The editors admitted the Herald was in bad shape financially, but weren't sure of the exact cause. It was emphasized that no one person was to blame.

"Most of the staff members have worked hard, always doing what they thought was best for the paper."

The staff went on to blame the majority of the college for their financial hardships.

"The policy of the Herald has always been to work for every movement and every organization that would tend to advance the interests in the K.S.A.C. and the student body. Consider now a moment the way in which our efforts have been received."

"Out of almost 1,700 students who were in college last year, less than 300 were subscribers or stockholders of the Herald."

"Only 49 members of the board of instruction have their name on our subscription list, and at least one-fourth of them are in arrears."

This time, the editors said they didn't want support if it was unwillingly given. But they didn't hesitate to throw in a jab at the students for the lack of appreciation for their work. If there is no demand for a student paper here, the few who have been pushing the Herald the past year, can dig down in their pockets, pay the debt that has been contracted in trying to make this a better school, and then drop out of college for a term while the paper 'of, for and by the students' becomes a memory."

At the next stockholders meeting, a new constitution was developed for the publishing company. In addition to numerous articles concerning staff duties, hiring of staff members and election of officers, article five, section three stated "The board of directors shall audit the books of the business manager at least once each term."

K-State alumni have maintained their bonds with the university for 122 years through the alumni association. From alumni clubs throughout the United States and the K-Stater magazine to Family Weekend and the 1995 Holiday Bowl pregame party, the association plays a vital role in the university scene. With nearly 33,000 members, the K-State Alumni Association is No. 1 in the Big Eight with the largest percentage of graduates who join their alumni association. That's because K-Staters are some of the most loyal alumni in the country.

We offer discounted annual and life memberships to recent graduates. For membership information, call us at 913-532-6260.

An Aggieville tradition you'll remember

Back in 1929, The Palace Drug Store was the Aggieville meeting place serving hot food and ice cream treats from their soda fountain. The pharmacy and cosmetic counter fulfilled the needs of Manhattanites.

Today, The Palace card & gift shop still maintains its tradition of old-fashioned service, while offering a unique selection of greeting cards and gift ideas. Come visit us today.

Printing technology has evolved from hand-laid type to computer pagination

In the University's infancy, years before what is now the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, there was the printing department.

Established in 1873, the department provided for its students 25 pairs of cases, 200 pounds of long primer type and a proof press to use for the practice in typesetting and drill in punctuation, capitalization and syllabication. Students deficient in English were expected to take printing, the idea being that work at the case would train them in spelling, grammar, punctuation, and other details.

Two-hour classes were taught each afternoon by College President John Anderson and M. Schillerstrom. After class was dismissed, according to A.A. Stewart, the cases were locked in racks to keep the students from throwing the type down the stairway. No paper was being published on campus at that time.

When the curriculum in industrial journalism was added in 1910, it was the only four-year course in printing offered by any college or university in the United States. Students majoring in industrial journalism were expected to be knowledgeable in many areas:

"... English, history, psychology, economics, sociology, international law, business organization, wage problems, public finance, banks and mechanisms of exchange, and public speaking.

"In connection with the English department, English construction, punctuation, capitalization and good usage are made simple and practical. The Department of Industrial Journalism gives instruction in the editorial and reportorial work of the printing course.

"The Department of Mechanical Engineering gives sufficient training in woodwork, blacksmithing and machine shop work to enable the student to handle tools well so that he may properly care for his machines and do necessary repairing. Work in steam, gas and electrical engineering is also required."

The transition from hot type to cold type to computer pagination took almost 50 years.

Students took advantage of changing technology to change the size of the newspaper in fall 1949.

A Cox-O-Type press capable of printing 3,500 copies an hour, was installed in the basement of Kedzie Hall, and the Collegian went from a semi-weekly broadsheet to daily tabloid-sized publication.

This also marked the first time the paper had been printed on campus since the fall of 1944 (during World War II), when the paper was reduced from a regular-sized paper to a tabloid and was published once a week. In fall 1946, after being printed on campus for more than a year, the paper returned to its former size and once again emerged from the presses of the Mercury-Chronicle.

"A man by the name of Amos was in charge of the production department," James Miller, fall 1943 editor, said. "That was literally putting each letter into a slide by hand. Then we did get a Linotype machine at the Mercury Chronicle. Some of my hours were spent down there putting

The transition from hot type to cold type to computer pagination took almost 50 years.

Students took advantage of changing technology to change the size of the newspaper in fall 1949.

A Cox-O-Type press capable of printing 3,500 copies an hour, was installed in the basement of Kedzie Hall, and the Collegian went from a semi-weekly broadsheet to daily tabloid-sized publication.

This also marked the first time the paper had been printed on campus since the fall of 1944 (during World War II), when the paper was reduced from a regular-sized paper to a tabloid and was published once a week. In fall 1946, after being printed on campus for more than a year, the paper returned to its former size and once again emerged from the presses of the Mercury-Chronicle.

"A man by the name of Amos was in charge of the production department," James Miller, fall 1943 editor, said. "That was literally putting each letter into a slide by hand. Then we did get a Linotype machine at the Mercury Chronicle. Some of my hours were spent down there putting type together.

The copy was written on manual typewriters on galleys before taken to the pressroom.

"We published about one in the afternoon," Gary Swanson, fall 1954 editor, said. "We used a Ludlow machine that made the heads in hot type. Hot type took a bit longer, and you didn't have the 50 type faces that you have in a computer.

"We had an early machine called a Scanagraver that allowed us to convert pictures on a half-tone to a piece of plastic. You wrapped a picture around a drum, and wrapped plastic around a drum and created half tones in plastic. Then you mounted it on a board and inserted it where you wanted it in the make-up.

"The technology is different today, but we were as committed and dedicated. Just because it happened 40 years ago doesn't mean it wasn't as good then as it is today."

In spring 1966, a $50,000 Cottrell web offset press, was installed and was designed to produce 15,000 eight-page newspapers an hour. It was also capable of producing 24-page papers and printing color. The first Collegian to use a four-color picture was the 176-page University Edition, a tabloid paper mailed to incoming freshmen and transfer students, published in the summer of 1966.

The first computers came in 1972, while Bill Brown was director. The Board of Student Publications approved the purchase of two Hendrix editing display terminals for the Collegian. This was the first computerized editing equipment in a Kansas newsroom and among the first four in a U.S. university.

Paper-punch typesetting equipment soon followed, and in 1981, a Compugraphic Trendsetter, capable of setting eight different fonts at sizes 6 to 72 points, was installed.

With the advent of standard size newsprint and standard advertising units, the decision was made to expand the paper to broadsheet size. Another Trendsetter was added in 1983 to speed up production when the Collegian changed to broadsheet format. Also in 1983, a fourth printing unit was added to the press so that 16-page papers could be printed.

Laser typesetting became a reality in 1987, when an Apple LaserWriter Plus and Linotronic 100 replaced the Trendsetters. These machines, with 32 resident fonts and several downloadable fonts are able to produce graphics as well as type.

And finally, the paper started down the road to full pagination in January 1992 when Student Senate funded a half-million dollar purchase of Macintosh computer equipment.

The computers were all networked together, which is linking the computers together so they can use common files.

"Originally, they had all Appletalks, which is a really slow network," Kelly Campbell, Kansas State Collegian network administrator, said. "We upgraded to Ethernet in the summer of 1993. We rewired the building so that if one room goes down, the rest of the building doesn't."

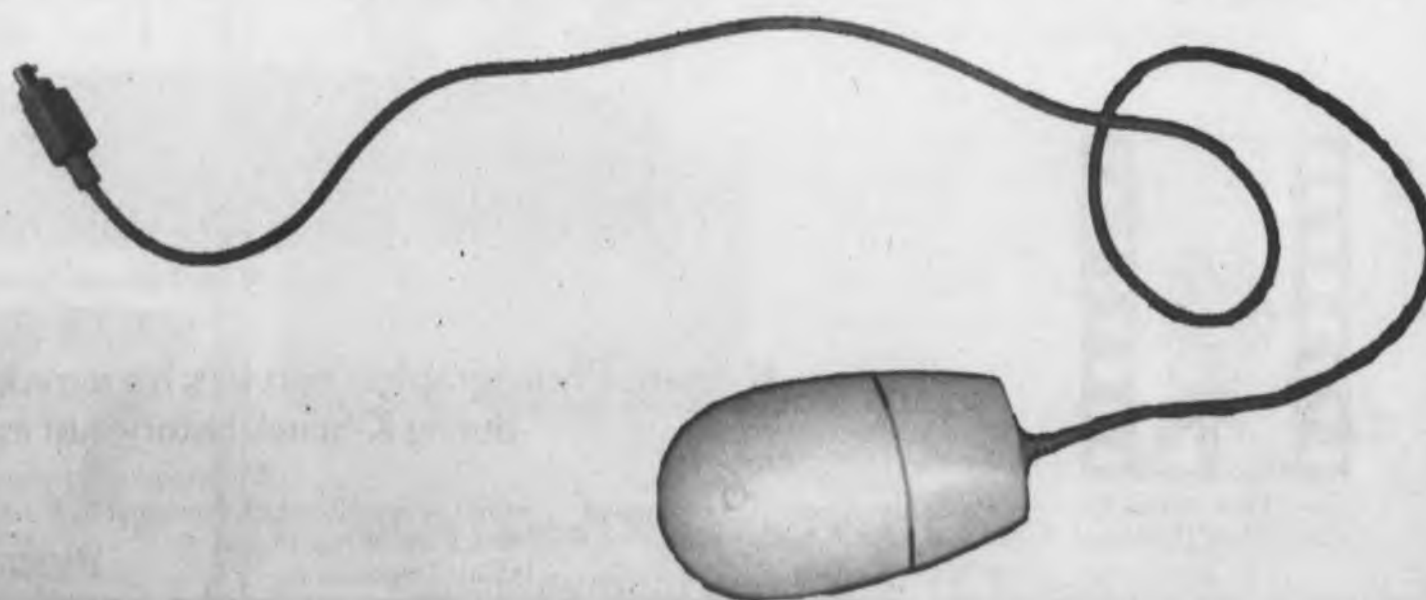

The fee continuation in spring 1995 resulted in an upgrade of computers to PowerMacs, and printing

1920s

Students try to find comfortable design

The decade began with the greatest enrollment in school history with 2,268.

There was little literary society news printed in the Collegian as the greek houses began to take over campus social life.

Former football coach Mike Ahearn was selected as Athletics Director, much to the delight of the editorial staff.

The design of the paper included editorial cartoons on page one, cutout photographs of football players and photos of buildings. However, there was a problem with staffing in fall 1920. A prize of $10 was offered to anyone who wrote the most column inches.

A subscription campaign netted 1,550 subscribers. Alumni subscriptions almost doubled that number to a total of 3,000.

The editorial board was active that year, calling for the erection of Memorial Stadium after a football game against the University of Kansas saw 5,500 fans in attendance.

Many stories were printed about how "girls" should act, perhaps because there were more women on the staff than men. Stories about cooking, University of Kansas men, the women's dorm and fashion dominated some of the issues.

There was also evidently some problem concerning the lack of student opinions in the Collegian. A lengthy front page editorial urged students to speak out if their opinions differed from the Collegian's.

"It often happens that the opinions of a newspaper do not represent the opinion of all of its constituents, and for this reason, most fair-minded newspapers are willing and anxious to get articles from those who have a different viewpoint, the only qualification being that the author shall be known to the editors." The staff established a "judge for yourself" column expressly for student opinion.

An activity fee was passed in fall 1921 by popular vote. The fee, $5 per semester, covered admission to all athletic events, debate contests, membership in student government, band concerts and all school of agriculture scholastic activities.

Students also raised money for the first section of Memorial Stadium, a move the editorial board firmly supported. The original goal was $125,000, but $131,000 was raised. Students raised more than half of the amount, totaling $76,500.

The Collegian staff expressed their relief when the cafeteria moved out of Kedzie Hall in 1922. The Department of Journalism was given the basement and the first floor, and the Department of English was given the second floor. The cafeteria moved to what is now Thompson Hall.

The staff began a new feature in 1923, even though such stories are common practice today. Each issue featured a personality profile of a student. Six or seven paragraphs were written about a person and accompanied by a photo.

That decade saw more reorganization of the Collegian, as the students tried to find a staff format that worked best.

So that more students could have the experience of editing the paper, the managing editor held office for only six weeks. Desks were organized under the managing editor, with the editor serving for one semester. Credit stopped being given for inches in a trial to get better-quality stories instead of quantity.

The papers began to get larger, with more pages. "With the increased size, the Collegian can print the news of the College," the students wrote.

A new design appeared in fall 1926 with headlines appearing in a serif face instead of the previous sans serif.

Another design change came in fall 1927. The headline font was changed again with more leading included. The headlines also stopped being all capital letter. The reasoning for this change was "because the staff wishes to place the Kansas State Collegian in the advance line of progressive newspapers which have abandoned antiquated and difficult headlines."

When beating KU wasn't commonplace

When K-State beat KU in football in 1924 for the first time since 1906, headlines shouted "JAYHAWKERS ARE HUMBLLED!"

13,000 people witnessed the victory in a completed Memorial Stadium. President William Jardine ruled that classes would be held, but "turned a blind eye when the classrooms emptied."

1930s

Collegian pro-active in campus changes

During the '30s, enrollment steadily declined with each semester, which officials blamed on the growing Depression. However, despite the loss of students, the Collegian staff was an active voice on campus.

The editorial board in 1931 decided on a Collegian "platform," a list of things it wanted to see changed on the campus that year.

The platform was printed every day on the editorial page. The platforms: name the campus drive, proportional division (department) representation in Student Council, more student participation in Student Council affairs, management of varsities by Student Council with all proceeds go to the Union building, and establishment of advanced degree programs for students.

Parking started becoming an issue that year when the Board of Regents passed a motion that students could not drive their cars on campus without written permission from their parents. Parking permits were $2 per year.

The 1931 staff was pro-active, writing editorials and stories that vigorously objected to many of the standard practices on campus.

One of those series involved the "black list." A standing column printed the names of professors who kept their students after the five-minute bell rang, which didn't give students enough time to get to classes across campus.

Another story highlighted the teaching methods of these professors, classifying them as lullaby (ones who put their students to sleep, sarcasm, unfair and prejudiced).

The third story in the series was professors' views, many of whom were unflattered by their portrayal in the Collegian.

As a result of the series, the Council of Deans met and decided the period between classes the next semester would be 10 minutes.

The staff also wanted to gauge student opinions on issues. It frequently held straw polls in Anderson, often with good results.

One such issue was whether movies should be shown in Manhattan on Sundays.

Back then, Kansas had so-called blue laws, which prohibited working on Sundays except for chores and light housecleaning. Movie theater operators would be violating that law by showing movies on Sunday.

The straw poll came out 765-189 in favor of the movies, perhaps because a Lawrence theater had begun showing Sunday pictures.

A theater began showing on Sundays but was forced to stop a few months later when the local welfare board threatened to take action. The welfare board had the power to close shows, pool halls and dance halls on Sunday.

Another straw vote asked which presidential candidate students preferred. Not surprisingly, in Republican Kansas, Herbert Hoover defeated Franklin D. Roosevelt in the poll.

Students in the '30s were often not concerned about the repercussions from not attending class after big campus events. Several times after a big football win, students would shut down the campus and declare a holiday, much to the dismay of the administration.

The first incident came in 1933, when the football team beat the University of Kansas. The following Monday, students posted a fake sign on the campus gate declaring classes closed for the day.

A mid-morning dance was held at the Warehouse, where the football coach showed up and tried to convince students to go to class. They booed him and left for Aggieville.

Once in Aggieville, the students from the Warehouse met up with a group of students who were intent on breaking up the few classes that were being taught.

The editorial board wrote about it the next day. "We pulled a boner—a prize boner," they wrote. "The staff, incidentally, spent 15 minutes at the south campus gate yesterday morning, begging to be admitted in view of the fact the Collegian must be edited."

Another holiday occurred in fall 1934. Picketers at all the gates prevented students from coming onto campus.

Later that semester, when K-State beat Nebraska for the Big 6 championship, President Farrell decided to declare the following Monday a holiday before the students could.

Kansas University will begin proceedings to change its name to "The Liberal College of Kansas" in an effort to name school of "certain ethnic schools in the state," according to KU Chancellor Franklin Meyer.

In a telephone interview with the Collegian, Meyer said that the name change is not a "political statement" but a "practical one."

Editors remember controversy, April Fools and editorials

The 1950s were an interesting time on campus. Some former editors called the decade boring, while others admitted they raised a ruckus.

1950 began with the Collegian staff fighting off an attempt to control their content. Some student government changes were proposed, with an eye to gaining control over student funds, clubs and student publications.

After much arguing and meeting with the Collegian staff, the passage was changed to "The Kansas State College Student Government shall make no law or regulation abridging the freedom of the student press at Kansas State College."

Philip Meyer, spring 1952 editor, wrote a story that had President James McCain stop the presses for 15 minutes. "It was paid for by student fees, and students in the Department of Architecture thought they should have a voice in how it was designed," Meyer said.

In those days, a state architect designed most of the campus buildings. So the Dean of engineering and architecture held a faculty meeting, letting faculty know they shouldn't talk to Meyer, and they shouldn't criticize the state architect in public.

Another 1950s editor created a stir on campus and got burned in effigy by the football team.

"When the president found out I'd been at that meeting, he delayed publication while he decided what to do." Meyer said McCain decided he would get worse press from the state newspapers for stopping Collegian publication than he would for letting the story run. As a result of the story, five members of the faculty did not get their contracts renewed, including one member who had been up for tenure.

Jim Bell, summer 1957 editor, remembered the annual April Fool's edition by the staff.

"It was the one day a year you could forget about news and do whatever you wanted," he said. "I had a great time. In those days, we worried a lot less about grades and a lot more about the paper. There were a lot of nights we were there until three in the morning, having a great time."

Bell learned one of the greatest tenets of journalism while at the Collegian — always check your sources. "After we beat KU in basketball one year, there was a big bonfire in Aggieville," Bell said. "A lot of people were celebrating, and the cops came down to watch and make sure everything was OK."

In the process, a student named Hall got hurt. Bell obtained his name from the police and verified it in the phone book.

The next day, a student named Hull, who had the same first name and year in school as Hall, came into the office. "I had gotten the wrong guy," Bell said. "I learned a lot from that."

Harold Myers, fall 1953 editor, said he remembers with regret some of the things he wrote.

Myers' mother knew Mrs. Ahearn, the wife of the athletic director. Myers overheard them talking about the football coach and criticizing him.

"I wrote a couple editorials about that, which I now regret. I shouldn't have jumped in like that," Myers said.

Myers said a former editor came back to the Collegian and remarked that the paper was boring.

"I was kind of shocked by that, but looking back, I can see what she meant,"

War coverage

Campus numbers swell with war brides, student soldiers during WWI

The United States formally declared war on Germany April 6, 1917. The editors of the Collegian informed the campus of this momentous event with a small paragraph on page 1.

But this small start to World War I coverage was rethought as the spring semester continued, and local ties to the war could be reported.

The Collegian discovered Kansas had the most severe patriotic laws in the United States. Citizens could be fined anywhere from $25 to $100 for wearing the flag, badge or insignia of any country at war with the United States.

On April 13, the college military band offered its services, became the first regimental band of the Marine Corps and served in France. By April 24, 61 men had withdrawn from school to enlist, and all seniors who enlisted received credit for their classes so they could graduate. The entire military staff of the college was called into action, and ROTC was discontinued for the semester.

When the fall rolled around, campus officials knew the draft would have an effect on the fall enrollment.

"It'll be girls, girls, girls," Jessie Machir, registrar, said. "How many boys will enroll, I don't know."

The campus swelled with war brides from Camp Funston at Fort Riley, and two battalions of male ROTC cadets were formed, as many student soldiers enrolled at K-State to train. Women were urged to major in engineering, as that profession was needed for the war effort.

The Collegian was diligent in war coverage that fall semester, printing at least one to two stories per day, often more.

One of the first stories of the semester had a major general accurately predicting the death toll of the war.

"We have had little wars before, but they have never compared with this war today. Many hundreds of thousands of our boys must go across the sea, and many, many thousands of them will not come back," Maj. General Leonard Wood said.

The Collegian began printing letters from soldiers who attended K-State or lived in Manhattan, and this became a regular feature.

The women of the college were asked to join the Red Cross and make surgical dressings during their vacant hours of the day. Eventually, 422 women joined the "patriotic league" and spent at least one or more hours a week rolling dressings.

Women also took the candy pledge, which meant they swore off eating chocolates and sweets so the sugar could be used for the war. But it was allowable for women to use sugar allotment to make candy to send to the soldiers. Most of the formal parties on campus were canceled, as students thought they would be a breach of patriotic ethics.

The Collegian was a big supporter of both the Liberty bond drive and the YMCA drive to raise money to build recreation centers for the troops overseas. The editorial board urged students to do everything they could, and news stories tracked the rate of growth of the funds.

The original goal for the YMCA drive was $8,000, but K-State students raised $11,274, which was the biggest amount out of all the state schools.

A graphic tried to illustrate to students where their money was going.

- "What your money can do."
- $4,500 — build a standard camp building
 - $3,500 — supply a motor truck for transport service
 - $1,500 — equip a building for service to a brigade of 6,000 men
 - $500 — will save lives of 60 POWS
 - $250 — will equip with instruments a complete orchestra, which can give daily entertainment to hundreds of men
 - $100 — will equip with books a camp library, which can give daily entertainment to thousands of men
 - $50 — provide comforts for 50 wounded or dangerously ill men
 - $25 — will provide writing materials to enable thousands of men in camp to keep in touch with home

The editorial board urged women not to forget the soldiers at Christmas by sending such gifts as handkerchiefs, buttons, thread, scissors, books and writing pads. Advertisers at this time asked students to practice economy by purchasing their products — "Wartime demands economy. Queen quality shoes are economy."

Early that fall, the war department appealed to K-State alumni, asking that mechanical draftsmen and engineers work as civilians in the design, testing and manufacturing of munitions. Many of the faculty, especially in the engineering departments, took sabbaticals to either enlist or work for the war department. Professor R.A. Seaton, head of the mechanical engineering department, accepted a commission as captain, and Dean A. Potter, engineering dean, went on sabbatical to do government work.

Twice sickness caused havoc with classes. An epidemic of Spanish influenza caused students to be placed in quarantine, classes to be canceled and the K-State-University of Kansas football game to be postponed.

Before Christmas, an outbreak of spinal meningitis at Camp Funston caused a ban on entertainments and meetings. The ban was raised for Christmas so students could go home, but more carriers were found and quarantined. The basketball team was decimated by the disease, with only one player well enough to attend practice.

As the war went on, fewer stories were printed, except for updates on the Red Cross. But the editorial board kept students informed about war events.

The editorial board also criticized many of the women on campus in May 1919, when 250 drafted men were sent to K-State to train. Women walked by the gym where the soldiers were quartered. A sign, the editorial pointed out, very clearly specified no women were allowed in the area.

World War II depletes campus

Unlike the coverage of the first world war, World War II coverage began with the banner headline "War Moves Jar K-State."

The entire front page (with the exception of two briefs) was filled with news about the attack on Pearl Harbor, including a story about the parents of students and alumni who were stationed in Hawaii and the Philippines.

"Collegians Stand Firm in Indignation at Japs, Favor War" another headline read. Most students were ready to retaliate against Japan.

A K-State sophomore was one of the first men to enlist in Topeka, and all men 21 years old or older were told to report to a general assembly on campus, bringing their classification cards. At the assembly, they were told to "sit tight" until Congress decided what to do with the draft laws.

Naturally, students were worried about the draft and wondered if they should bother enrolling for the next semester.

An editorial urged students to realize they needed an education. "It is the obligation of KSC students and all college students to recognize their duty to make the most of their education and training now in preparation for the time that their services are needed by their government."

Another editorial also addressed these feelings.

"There is a decided undercurrent of feeling on the campus of minor war hysteria." The editorial predicted there would be a drop in enrollment second semester. As a result of the reduction of the draft age, 2,400 students at K-State were eligible for the draft. To help prevent the drop, the editorial called for "an intensified course, allowing a degree in a shorter time than the usual four years, credit for courses dropped by men called to the army and a partial refund of fees — under such conditions would do a great deal toward stimulating enrollment."

President David Farrell urged students to stay in school until called up, and the administration responded to student needs by offering a three-year program. It allowed students to take heavier loads, attend summer school and have shorter holiday breaks. One day was allowed at Thanksgiving, and Christmas break was shortened to Dec. 23 to Jan. 2.

James Miller, fall 1943 editor, was one of those who went through the three-year program in order to enlist.

"The war had taken so many people away from school," Miller said. "I had to go through a hurry-up program to graduate in three years."

By the beginning of the spring 1942 semester, the war toll was obvious. Enrollment declined 477 that semester. Those in ROTC received commissions in the army, and the reserves were deployed in the beginning of 1943.

By 1944, a war-time low enrollment was 1,448 students.

"The sad thing was seeing boyfriends go off somewhere else," Ahda Sommers Burrows, spring 1944 business manager, said. "It was really a sad time."

"There were lots more women than men, because not many men got to stay around. It seems it was mostly women I worked with. I don't remember a lot of social times on campus. I do remember the drug store in Aggieville was overflowing with guys."

"It was a wonderful time, and a sad time too," Burrows said. "We were learning a lot, but it was sad."

So many K-State alumni and former students were in the service that a special subscription price of $1.50 was offered to them. Beginning in fall 1942 and lasting throughout the war, a special column, called Bars and Stripes, contained news from servicemen in different camps. The idea was not only to keep those at home informed of the activities of friends and family, but to keep those who would be returning to college informed of K-State happenings.

K-State also played a part in the war department's education effort.

Defense training courses were taught, such as Ultra High Frequency techniques, which was Britain's radio defense against night bombers. Several faculty members went on leave of absence from the college, including Hillier Kriehbaum, journalism associate professor, who took a leave of absence to work with UPI during the war. K-State became an

Students find time to play during Vietnam war, Watergate

Abortion, birth control and the war in Vietnam dominated the headlines and page one of the Collegians in the early 70s.

With the passing of Roe v. Wade in 1971 and new advances in birth control methods, women's rights were often a subject of debate by K-State students.

In 1972, it was decided women 18 years of age or older could purchase birth control at Lafene Health Center. Previously, a form was sent to parents to sign if a woman wanted to be on birth control.

This, stories about K-State women who had abortions and an ad protesting abortion, prompted several letters to the editor on the pros and cons of the issues.

During this time, the Watergate scandal also wiped campus news off page one.

But with the serious issues at hand, students needed time to play, which they did to excess.

In 1974, there was almost a riot in Aggieville following the first football win over the University of Kansas since 1954.

A picture showed wall-to-wall people in Aggieville, and a story described the scene as a "curb-to-curb carpeting of beer cans, charred remains of laundry baskets, chairs and trashcans used to feed a bonfire, and the unmistakable smell of liquor throughout the area."

The Aggieville bars lost a lot of money when the police shut them down between 11:30 and midnight in an attempt to keep people from drinking in the street.

On March 6, 1974, the "newest national pastime, running through campus or town stark naked, has finally come to K-State."

Two men dashed from Holtz Hall to Cardwell Hall wearing only stocking caps and tennis shoes. The Collegian published two photos, one displaying one of the streakers, bare butt facing the camera.

Collegian columnists jumped on the bandwagon, encouraging both genders to strip and run.

Their wish came true a couple days later, when several hundred students gathered outside the K-State Union and watched as several people doffed their clothing for the masses.

The article explained it began in Aggieville at about 10 p.m. Groups of students passed the word there would be a mass streak at the Union.

With cups of beer in hand, they slowly gathered to witness the first streakers, two men riding naked in the backs of their cars.

At 10:30 p.m., four males and two females stripped and split up in a mad dash to Cardwell and the auditorium.

At 11:30 p.m., a red El Camino passed by the crowd with two nude bodies "prancing in the flatbed."

After this the crowd broke loose, with streakers crossing various sections of the parking lot.

When more than 1,000 people had gathered, the entire KSU Rugby Club climbed onto the Union overhang and mooned the crowd.

A letter writer later that week congratulated the participants for breaking from the norm and finally not waiting for KU to do something first.

IT'S NIXON, BY GEORGE!!

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Political Writer

President Nixon swept to victory Tuesday night, burying Democratic challenger George McGovern in one of history's greatest land slides.

But widespread skepticism appeared to be blunting the impact of Nixon's triumph in the victory of some other Republican candidates.

The pattern was noted in an array of close Senate contests. Ultimately 50 electoral votes passed Nixon's electoral vote count to the 270 votes he needed for his "four more years" in the White House.

He led for 161 more electoral votes.

In all, Nixon held the lead in 40 states, McGovern in four and the District of Columbia, where he had gained for three electoral votes.

Nixon 13,771,158 votes or 44 per cent.
McGovern 7,500,121 votes or 25 per cent.

AMID THE night Senate contests, there was a good omen for Democrats in Kentucky, where they gained what had been a Republican seat.

The victory of Democrat Walter Mondale diminished what hopes Republicans had that they might ride the Nixon landslide at Senate contests for the first time in 16 years.

In the House, where the Republicans need 245 seats to take over — and never really thought they could do it — partial victories gave them a hot pickup of only one.

The picture was similar in South Carolina and Oklahoma, far seats won by Democrats.

Popular vote, 44 per cent of voting units: Nixon 13,771,158 or 44 per cent. McGovern 7,500,121 or 25 per cent.

Electoral vote: Nixon carried 30 states with 297 electoral votes and led in 44 states with 44 electoral votes. McGovern carried the District of Columbia with 3 electoral votes and led in 3 states with 13 electoral votes. Nixon needed 270 electoral votes.

SENATE: At stake 50, majority 51. Republicans won 3 and lost 47. Democrats won 1 and lost 46. McGovern won 1 and lost 46. Nixon won 49 and lost 1.

HOUSE: At stake 435, majority 218. Republicans won 121 and lost 314. Democrats won 121 and lost 314. Nixon won 121 and lost 314.

GOVERNORS: At stake 35, majority 18. Republicans won 1 and lost 34. Democrats won 1 and lost 34. Nixon won 1 and lost 34.

LEGISLATURES: At stake 100, majority 51. Republicans won 1 and lost 99. Democrats won 1 and lost 99. Nixon won 1 and lost 99.

McGovern, was a close second in the Democratic column but encountered his campaign.

Nixon was polling 44 per cent of the vote.

Incumbents sweep Kansas

TOPEKA (AP) — Kansas voters gave incumbents a resounding vote of confidence Tuesday, defeating the state's seven electoral votes to President Nixon and handing a fourth year term to Democratic Gov. Robert D. Bell.

Aggie crowds cause severe damage

Owners pick up pieces from horde's rampage

By Dave Kistner
The 100th anniversary of the founding of Kansas State University is being celebrated in a number of ways. One of the most significant is the annual Aggieville riot, which is held every year on the campus of the university. This year's riot was particularly wild, with thousands of students participating in a rampage through the streets of Manhattan. The damage to the city was severe, with many buildings and cars destroyed. The owners of the damaged property are now picking up the pieces.

Part of what we were trying to accomplish was accomplished.

services purchased a machine which allowed the pages to print straight to film. "Possibly the best thing about the Linotron was the fact that our quality was doubled and going straight to film let us try a few new things," Neil Anderson, spring 1995 and fall 1995 editor, said. "The rough part was working out the kinks with the press team. Every night was a new adventure and headache. "The Linotron also improved our color production. We ran four color four times during the semester and processed the separations ourselves. "The Collegian staff continued to use new technology when they began to put together an electronic version of the Collegian that was sent over the Internet via the World Wide Web. Campbell was one of the original people who put the Collegian across the World Wide Web in summer 1994. The Collegian was one of the first three college newspapers to publish daily on the web. "The idea came from Ron originally, in the form of how can we make our archives searchable. That same summer we got plugged into the Internet," he said. "We started looking at different ways to put the publication online. I posted something on a K-State newsgroup when I had a prototype set up on Gopher. They told me to look at the web as a way to do it." That first summer, Ryan Korte, then-network administrator, and Campbell developed the first edition of the program that creates the E-Collegian. "The first issue, I did by hand. Then throughout the summer, each issue got a little more automated," he said. Since that time, the E-Collegian has been rated among the top 5 percent of Web sites by Point Communications Corp., of New York City and won first place in content in the Associated Collegiate Press' Best of the Net competition in November 1995 in Washington, D.C.

News about the E-Collegian has been published in the Chronicle of Higher Education, Editor and Publisher, several dailies in Kansas, the Kansas Press Association newsletter and The Manhattan Mercury.

The number of "hits" on the server that holds the electronic version of the paper averages about 6,000 per day. Of those who access the electronic version, about 40 percent are on-campus users; the rest are from around the nation and even extend overseas to Germany, Finland, Australia and England.

In the future, Campbell said the Collegian might go onto a Unix system for the World Wide Web and the file server.

"Hopefully, it'll have more security and more speed and be able to handle a lot more clients."

Stephanie Fuqua contributed to this article.

Reminiscence with us at Woody's

1980s

The move from tabloid to broadsheet was arduous

The Collegians during the 1980s could have been mistaken for a professional newspaper.

The front page was usually covered with national and international news. A variety of news, features and cartoons were inside. And the big difference was the paper was a broadsheet — a far cry from the 80-plus years of tabloid papers. In fact, a letter to the editor following the change said the tabloid format had made the Collegian different from professional papers, and would the staff please change it back? But the road to changing the format wasn't easy. Paul Hanson, fall 1983 editor, helped put the change together and wrote this account.

Phil the pressman was sure it wouldn't work.

There was simply no way to change the Collegian from a tabloid to a broadsheet without buying new presses, busting the budget, or having it come out looking like a real rag. Even if it could be done, he assured us, the crew we had assembled didn't have a chance of pulling it off.

Phil's partner, Ed, didn't appear to give the matter much thought. Always dressed in his railroader's hat and overalls, he just tended to his work with eyes twinkling, puffing on his pipe and dreaming of trains.

If you're too young to recall, take a look back at some old commercial newspapers from the late '70s or early '80s. You should get a pretty good idea of what we were up against when we decided to make the change in the Fall of 1983.

When we started talking about this in late '81 or early '82, the importance of newspaper design wasn't anywhere near as universally recognized as it is today.

Most newspapers were a jumble of conflicting typefaces and inconsistent styles. We didn't have USA Today, and hardly anyone had heard of Mario Garcia. The most comprehensive guide we had to rely on — our textbook, you might say — was a book about the redesign of the Minneapolis Star-Tribune.

The ever-gracious Harry Marsh, journalism department head at the time, approved an independent study course so I could spend the necessary months reading and researching everything I could find about newspaper design. Even so, information was harder to find than it was to digest. The Internet was then a specialized tool for engineers, defense contractors, Fortran writers and professors, and I wasn't computer-savvy enough to make use of whatever resources it might have afforded us, anyway.

But it never would have come together without him.

Of course we ran into some minor difficulties along the way.

After all the reading and research, brainstorming and mock-ups, comparing typefaces and drawing up specifications to develop the optimum for glance appearance, ease of reading and the like, I learned that advertising had its own thoughts and requirements. There was some give-and-take, but we were all pretty much committed to making it work, so it really went relatively smoothly (at least until the day-in and day-out of putting together a daily paper began to take its toll).

We also had to take into account what the press could handle, and there were a few adjustments in that regard as well. Most related to adjusting Phil the pressman's attitude. Give credit to Sandy Lang, the managing editor that fall, for bringing out the teddy bear that was hiding inside Phil's grizzly skin.

The others are too numerous to mention. But great credit must go to two people who contributed extraordinary patience and a can-do attitude: David Adams, our adviser at the time, and Connie Nelson, who did the cutting and pasting, and who I believe has a different last name now.

information center with an education program for disseminating defense data. The public was encouraged to utilize the "war library" to answer questions.

Meanwhile, the campus was used as a training ground for service men.

500 Air Corps cadets were trained at K-State and housed at fraternities. Eleven out of 16 fraternities agreed to give up their houses. The women gave up Van Zile Hall for the Army Specialized Training Program.

"We had ASTP students there," Dick Dodderidge, a Collegian sports editor, said. "They had taken most of the frat houses and dorms. We saw a lot of military student on campus. It was hard to realize, but there must not have been many students."

Miller was one who was housed in Van Zile, and Burrows was one of the women who had to move out.

"Summer school I was in uniform with the ROTC, and we lived in Van Zile Hall," Miller said. "We had a four-week session and an eight-week session to wrap up my senior year."

Burrows said moving out was one of her most vivid memories of the war.

"We all had to move out. The big thing was trying to find a place to live. I moved two or three different places, trying to find a decent place to live."

Besides moving into the dormitory, the soldiers caused another stir on campus.

"They were all smoking on campus, which was something we all wanted to do, but it wasn't permitted," Burrows said. "They had to pass a rule that GIs could smoke outside of classrooms."

Women were again editorially asked to do their part for the war.

The Red Cross offered classes in first aid, nursing, knitting and garment making, and more than 800 women joined.

While the women were learning nursing, Manhattan prepared. Those who knew the history of WWII might laugh, but in 1941 the Midwest states were making plans for invasion.

In mid-December 1941, preliminary plans for "the occurrence of the impossible" — air raids in Manhattan — were laid down. Students came back from Christmas break to find the campus on a war time footing. One practice alarm and blackout were scheduled with plans for the ROTC to patrol campus grounds at night.

However, that plan was dropped because the logistics were too difficult to work out.

In March of 1942, the plans were tested, with the first blackout from 10 to 10:30. "Even though the chance of an invasion of Kansas is slight," the Collegian editorial board wrote, "this test was made to find out what is wrong with the system before it is urgently needed."

Sigma Tau, an engineering honorary, planned St. Patrick's Day prom and arranged for Louis Armstrong's band to play. Collegian columnist Milt Dean Hill said Armstrong wasn't one of the nations leading dance orchestras, disagreeing with Sigma Tau's choice.

Sigma Tau members kidnapped him for "making derogatory remarks" toward engineers. Hill was taken to the basement of an abandoned farm house and put to trial. He was found "guilty" and sentenced to eat a Collegian, thereby "eating his words." Hill refused to eat the paper and force feeding failed. He was branded with Sigma Tau symbols in potassium permanganate and released to find his way home.

Even though it was meant as a prank, Hill pressed charges, which were later dropped. But the two ringleaders were tried by Student Council and found guilty. They were suspended from all social privileges for a month and reprimanded by President Farrell.

IT'S BEEN A WONDERFUL 100 YEARS.

Mr. "Guy" Varney knew the importance of the new student newspaper as he placed the largest advertisement, right on the front page, 100 years ago.

In 1895, Varney's Book Store was located on Poyntz Avenue in downtown Manhattan. The store specialized in books, gifts, wallpaper, photography supplies, and picture frames.

In 1904, Varney purchased land near the southeast corner of campus, and built the first Varney's Book Store in Aggieville.

Guy Varney's son, Ted, continued to advertise in the Collegian. Every K-Stater knew about going to "Crazy Ted" to buy and sell textbooks.

As K-State grew, so did Varney's. The Collegian made sure the students kept abreast of our progress.

Varney's Book Store today. Just as the Collegian, Varney's has looked to the future while honoring our past.

Scooping the nation

The scoop.

Reporters dream about it. Editors argue about it.

In the newspaper business, people go to great lengths to scoop other newspapers on stories. During its 100-year history, the Collegian has twice scooped not only local and state newspapers, but national papers, as well.

Collegian staff members were the first to print the news of an assassination attempt on President Harry Truman Nov. 1, 1950, and of the assassination of President John Kennedy in 1963. Both staffs received the stories over the wire and rushed to print special editions.

The following are their stories.

On Nov. 1, 1950, three armed men made an attempt on the life of President Harry S. Truman as the Collegian was going to press. Floyd Jack, issues editor, ordered a remake of page one so the story could be printed the next day.

"We were just locking up page one (all the other pages were on the flat-bed in the basement) when the AP wire machine began to clang away," Jack said.

"I don't remember the number of bells to announce the movement of a major story, but we all ran to the teletype.

"We had a student who was working as a Linotype operator; he began setting the story as we literally ripped the story line-by-line from the machine and carried it to him."

The shooting took place at 1:15 p.m. The AP release was on the wire at 2:15 p.m., and the Collegian was printed and being sold on the street at 2:40 p.m.

Betty Omer Creek, editor, said the Collegian was the first issue on the street.

"We just got it together and put it out," Creek said.

Jack wrote an account of selling the paper in the Nov. 2 Collegian.

"The first newsboys left Kedzie with 100 papers; more were soon called for. Reaction of downtowners to the news was conservative — mixed. Many who heard the first cry of "EXTRA" thought that we were crazy. Others just stood and giggled, thinking it was a practical joke," Jack wrote.

"To say that the initial buying rush was fair would be an overstatement. People just looked. Few bought until the ice was broken, when the papers really began to sell.

"Quite a few thought that we were giving the paper away, and some downtown subscribers thought that the paper should be delivered to them on the spot. Several subscribers were indignant when we hawkers didn't see it that way.

"The general impression of the crowd was that it was a joke. Many had undoubtedly never seen an extra edition on the street before; others no doubt had never seen papers sold on the streets of Manhattan. They soon caught on though, and we yelled.

"We yelled all right — you could hear us up and down Poyntz. From Houston to Humboldt, and from the railroad tracks to the court house you could find Collegian workers yelling at the top of their lungs until their throats gave out.

"We sold more than 500 copies on the street, and ours was the first paper in town with the story."

A week later, Jack said, Editor and Publisher credited the Kansas State Collegian with being the first newspaper on the streets in the United States with the story.

"No, we did not cover the story," Jack said, "but the Collegian staff reacted with all the precision and dedication of our chosen craft."

BULLETIN — Word came over the radio at 1:30 p.m. that the President was dead.

For those in the newsroom on Nov. 22, 1963, it was a typical day. The paper was finished and running on the press. Three thousand copies had already been printed when the UPI teletype began to clang.

"I remember being told if the wire service machine rang four bells, it would be a major story," Wayne Perk, (look up what he was), said.

"When Kennedy was shot, it rang 13 times. People ran to the machine. And those who were not stunned cried like the world came to an end."

The news spread quickly on campus, catching those staff members who were not in the newsroom.

"I was walking back to the dorm when a student ran past me yelling that Kennedy had been shot," said Ken Kingsley, who was business manager of the Collegian.

"I returned to Kedzie to help put the story together as it developed."

The presses were stopped so that the front page could be rebuilt. At first, the headline said the president had been shot. This was changed when reports came in that Kennedy had died.

"There were six to eight people running around, writing headlines, doing layout and trying to see if there were any local angles," Kingsley said.

"We were really trying to pull off as much as we could, sidebars and such. Having control of the presses downstairs, we were able to turn it around pretty quickly."

More than 9,000 new copies of the paper were printed. Staff members loaded the papers into their cars and sold the paper through Aggieville and Manhattan.

Campus Comment

Students React to Assassination

By NORMAN HUGHES

TRAGIC HANNES headlines are gone from front pages of U.S. newspapers. Television is back to normal. The initial shock of President Kennedy's assassination has come and gone.

Government officials are settling down to the business at hand. A former first family is attempting to recover from the personal loss of its father and husband.

BUT WHAT of the millions of citizens throughout the country? How are they reacting? K-Stater's replied through random sampling.

Gretchen Brandt, HE So: "The remarkable thing is that our government is not dependent on one individual. Confusion and chaos might have reigned in such a crisis had not the steady processes of American government continued to function."

FRED WILLIAMS, TC Jr: "People may begin to realize that we can have such trouble in our own country. Similar events in other countries previously seemed too remote from the civilized U.S. The assassination of our President may wake us up and help start a re-evaluation of goals."

GARY MANN, PHB SR: "This tragic incident illustrates that we have a long way to go in our society. There's a lot to be learned from this event."

KATHERINE HUSSEY, ENG Sr: "The course of history has been altered because of the assassination, but no man can be, or should be, indispensable, according to our democratic system of government."

GARY ROSE, ENT SR: "The country is perhaps more united now than before because of Kennedy's death. Everyone has immediately rallied in support of President Lyndon Johnson."

CATHY DICKEY, SED Jr: "The White House will miss the Kennedy's social dignity and grace. As reported in a London newspaper, the family gave the White House a certain majesty which had been lacking until now."

Dean Makes Farce
Of Tribunal Decision

SO—WE CAN EXPECT Gene Meier back next fall, and most of all, on the football team, since the administration—through Dean of Students Wunderlich—has rejected Tribunal's recommendations to expel him until September 1, 1998, and instead will allow him to return to the summer session.

In speaking to Dean Wunderlich, we heard various comments—including that: Meier was a minor factor in the rescue, hence, he shouldn't be punished very seriously. We figure Meier has sympathy coming—even pity, perhaps—but, after all, would just any student be given the chance he has been? We've heard Assistant Dean Jacot explain that Meier has been in trouble every year—all three of them—he's been in school. Why should Tribunal be overruled in his case?

IF HE WEREN'T captain of next fall's football team, would the administration have so decided?

We honestly doubt it.

We just would be willing to think there had been some pressure exerted somewhere—not that we're accusing the athletic department of anything, of course—and certainly in the right spot.

Tribunal's recommendations to the administration are merely overruled—although we suppose that we can't be quite so idealistic where the football team captain is involved.

TO BE QUITE FRANK—we're sick of this kind of thing.

We don't like the school to be made to look foolish—we don't like student government overruled—we don't approve of the administration being belittled. And that's just what we think has happened.

Certainly, the Scholarship committee has refused an athletic scholarship to either man for next fall, but this doesn't mean they'll be refused in the spring. As Chairman Max Milbourn commented, it will be determined on their conduct and grade averages during the fall term.

But does this really mean anything?

WE DOUBT IT—because this principle isn't the basic issue. It's common sense that the Scholarship committee didn't endorse what has already been an obvious faux pas.

The basic issue is the Tribunal recommendation, and whether or not SGA has reason to exist.

If not—we're wasting an awful lot of state money.

If so—why don't we trust in his decision? Or didn't it give proper consideration? We understand the dean of students sits in on these meetings; why doesn't the decision—via him—come from the administration come then? Why delay this situation, if it's only a matter of time?—Sue Goss.

Hung in effigy

Sticking up for a tribunal decision gets editor harassed by football team

After sticking up for the rights of a houseboy and a decision by Student Tribunal, Sue Goss Saunders was hung in effigy by football players and followed around campus.

The saga began in the spring of 1958 when Saunders was editor of the Collegian. A football player named Gene Meier went to a spring party at Van Zile Hall and picked a fight with a houseboy. Houseboys lived in the female dormitories and had several duties, including escorting males out of the dorms by 1 a.m., locking the doors and changing lightbulbs.

Meier had been on disciplinary probation since the spring of 1957. After this incident, Student Tribunal stripped Meier of his scholarship and expelled him for the spring semester, thereby making him ineligible for football in the fall.

"Jocks screamed in pain—he was, as I recall, the quarterback," Saunders said.

The Dean of Students overruled the Student Tribunal decision and allowed Meier to attend Fort Hays for summer school, making him eligible for fall football.

"Well, there were some journalists who found that improper. As editor, I wrote an editorial to that effect. And this sterling assistant editor named Sharon Kessinger added to it with a headline that was quite catchy: 'Dean Makes Farce of Student Tribunal.'"

The editorial suggested that as an athlete, Meier was being favored. "If he weren't the captain of next fall's football team, would the administration have so decided? We honestly doubt it."

After the editorial, as Saunders

When the football players followed me around, I was scared to death. I didn't admit it back then, but I was.

Sue Goss Saunders

said, "It hit the fan."

"I was invited to the good dean's office and suggested I might look elsewhere for a more suitable university situation," Saunders said. "I got hung in effigy and followed across campus by a burly bunch of guys who suggested my parentage and other genetic traits might be questionable." The big, burly guys were, of course, football players.

"It was scary as hell," she said.

Saunders was the first woman from her family to attend college. She didn't feel comfortable at K-State and felt she didn't fit in. Being editor gave her self confidence. She wouldn't admit she was scared, she said, because it was important for her to be who she was.

"When the football players followed me around, I was scared to death. I didn't admit it back then, but I was," Saunders said. "But it was important to me to get the information out there. The professors I had at K-State taught me that."

Saunders also cited C.J. "Chief" Medlin, and her colleagues as supporting her throughout the ordeal.

"There were a lot of people who supported me, and I needed that," she said.

"Some are my best friends to this day."

Even a campus police officer recognized her as she was walking to class one day, stopped and told her she was doing the right thing.

Unfortunately, many students who were quoted in the Collegian supported the dean's decision and the football team.

"Yes, we need the football players. Most of them came here not for an education, but to play football," one person said.

But, this isn't the end of the story.

Some 15 years later, Saunders and her husband packed up their children and moved from the Nixon era in Washington, D.C. to Nebraska, where they bought a county weekly.

"We did what we believed journalists must do—launch the first comprehensive government coverage the town had seen in years, coverage that took me to cover the county government in the neighboring county seat town," Saunders said. "There the outgoing publisher introduced me to the county judge with a later comment that the judge had also gone to K-State."

During her first visit to see the judge, she mentioned they shared an alma mater.

"His response was a bit unexpected. 'Yes, we were there at the same time. Don't you remember me?'"

After stammering for a bit, Saunders admitted she couldn't remember him.

"The dear judge apologized for expecting me to remember him—after all, I was an editor and he was just a houseboy!" she said. "Remember, students, you never know how news coverage can write your future!"

And with that twist to the tale, Saunders said most of the people she has told this story to assumed the judge was Gene Meier.

High Judicial Board
Handles Case Nicely

TWO MEN FIGHT rather serious charges last night before the College Tribunal, and we were quite impressed at the way the highest judicial board on campus handled the entire situation.

Several problems arose: 1. stories conflicted seriously; 2. the two accused are athletes—No. 1 players for next year's football team; and 3. both of them seemed to have been involved in previous conflicts or disturbances. CONSIDERABLY, the two asked for—and got—an open trial, in order that the campus as a whole—via the Collegian—might get both sides to ensure a clear picture. Tribunal sessions are usually closed to the press, except in such cases where there seemed to be a need for the benefit of the entire story was made known.

We saw no evidence of any misbehavior, biased judgment, or inconsistency in treatment of those questioned. To the contrary, the court had a single purpose: to find the truth.

UNFORTUNATELY, the "truth"—if we can assume there is such—is not known, and can only be known to the minds of those who participated. The public pointed to Tribunal last night only from factors which are known and were up for consideration, and require heavily consideration—the institution themselves took until 11:30 a.m.—and the discussion lasted until after 1:30 a.m.

Whether or not we will agree with Tribunal's decision is strictly a personal judgment, but we can't help feeling that the decision will fit the situation. We can't remember when we've been more pleased to seeing a college group in action—unfortunately all K-State doesn't work with the same thoroughness, accuracy, and efficiency.

ANOTHER THING came to light last night in the session—what we saw—consideration is to be given athletes. We heard one student say they should not be allowed because they are athletes, and then remark that they had been trained to react, not to think, which should be retained. Obviously, a disciplinary committee here, although it didn't happen to come in the testimony of those who are accused.

WE FEEL OF ALL, refuse to admit athletes deserve special treatment. They're human beings, they eat, sleep, and drink—just like the rest of us. We can't believe that they are separate and that they have any worse measures or morals than many of those nonathletes on campus. It's neither fair nor reasonable to exclude an entire group for characteristics of a few—any more than it would be fair to accept those more individuals on a charge simply because they play ball—like them.

◄ The far editorial blasted the Dean of Students for overturning Tribunal's decision.

Mentors

Whether it was helping someone find a job after graduation or simply giving a shoulder to lean on, many journalism instructors touched students' lives. Collegian editors remember some of the people who made a difference in their lives.

Bill Brown

COLLEEN SMITH TRUELSON, SPRING 1975 ADVERTISING MANAGER

"My idea of college was almost as a trade school. Not as theory but as practical experience. With Bill as advisor, we operated as a regular newspaper. I remember with the police and court reports, we could have gotten ourselves in trouble because we didn't know the system. Bill had done a lot of reporting in that and felt comfortable with it, and made us feel comfortable."

"He gave us a great deal of poise. Looking at my class, a lot of us turned out to be editors, the people who are in charge. We couldn't do that without poise, and we got that from Bill Brown."

CAROL HOLSTEAD, FALL 1980 EDITOR

"I remember practical jokes. I remember putting a blow-up doll in Bill Brown's office."

"I remember something about a pig in his office too."

"He's got this sense of humor — it's very dry. He sort of epitomized in some ways the crusty newspaper guy, but he had a really soft heart."

"He was a great storyteller. He was inspirational, because he really instilled the values of what it meant to be a journalist and newspaper person. He got people excited about working for newspapers."

KAY COLES, SUMMER 1977 EDITOR

"Bill is one of the scariest and yet warmest people you'd ever want to know. He had a look about him that was a little scary, but he was one of the kindest men you'd ever meet."

"He was one of the greatest teachers, because he'd make you do it again and again until it met his standard of perfection."

"He had a certain presence about students. We'd all cower in awe of him, then he'd cut up with one of his wry jokes and have the place in stitches."

Merrill Samuelson

PHILIP MEYER, SPRING 1952 EDITOR

"One of the things he gave me was courage. He would remind us that telling the truth was what journalists were supposed to do. Student Council was holding a meeting in a nightclub in Lawrence. We went down to catch them in the act of having fun on Student Council time. Merrill told me, 'If you have any doubt about the propriety of what you are doing, remember that's what journalists do.'"

"He carried a slide rule and said journalists shouldn't be afraid of using quantitative methods."

GARY SWANSON, FALL 1954

"He taught Reporting 1 three days a week. The first thing you did when you came in was he verbalized 25 spelling words. If the collective class could get all 25 right, we wouldn't have class and could go to the Union. He taught the fact you needed to know language, you needed to know words."

"We didn't have many professors, only six or seven on staff. He had a real sensitive need for what students needed to know, and that's what we learned."

"You learned how to write. It was a really great experience for me personally to go through journalism at K-State."

SALLY (DOYLE) BAKER, 1952 AND 1953 ADVERTISING MANAGER 52

"Mr. Samuelson was tough! He challenged and pushed us to do our best. We'd walk into class, receive our assignment and the story was due an hour later at the end of class. Also, he critiqued our work and much of it was lacking, but that is the way one learns to write."

C.J. "Chief" Medlin

JIM BELL, SUMMER 1953 EDITOR

"C.J. Medlin was really a legend and he ought to be. He was a mentor for a lot of us. He stood up for the students, and we loved him for it. I felt like I had lost a favorite uncle when he died."

"He was the kind of guy who put students, integrity and journalism first. He liked to associate with students more than faculty. He was a marvelous human being."

"I always thought of him as my mentor. One person can't be a mentor to everybody, but this guy was that way. It's hard to say enough good things about him."

DONNA FLOOD, FALL 1975 ADVERTISING MANAGER

"I always felt really comfortable working around him. He was really professional with both sides of the newspaper. I didn't get ad manager the first time. I just thought I'd slide right in because I was assistant. He was really nice to me."

SUE GOSS SAUNDERS, FALL 1957 AND SPRING 1958 EDITOR

"Chief was the most wonderful human being I've known in my life. He was not a professor, not a journalist, he was a man of the people. He got me to apply for editor. He was an ordinary human being who understood people in ways I'd never understood them. He made me believe in myself."

ANDA SOMMERS BURROW, SPRING 1944 EDITOR

"He was always so good-natured. He could criticize you, and you didn't know you were being criticized. He expected you to do your best, and he didn't stand around waiting for you to do it."

"He helped me get a job at the Mercury-Chronicle after I graduated. It was during the war, and they were short-handed down there."

JOAN COBBLE, FALL 1961 EDITOR

"Chief, everyone loved. He influenced us in many ways just by being there. He was always on the students side."

KEN KINGSLEY, SPRING 1964 EDITOR

"The K-State journalism adviser who had the most influence on me was C.J. Medlin. Chief got me to apply for the advertising manager position, and was responsible for me being named the Sigma Delta Chi Outstanding Male Journalism Graduate of KSU in 1964."

"He helped me understand and value journalism as a career, and he instilled in me the importance of striving for ethics and quality in my chosen profession. He took a personal interest in me and encouraged me to go after those things I wanted."

"He was a warm, sensitive man who had a quip for any occasion, and could ease the tension in a tight situation with a few well-chosen words. More than once I went to him for advice on a personal or school problem, and he was always there with just the message I needed."

SALLY BAKER, 1952 AND 1953 ADVERTISING MANAGER 52

"I cannot say enough about Chief Medlin. Not only was he a mentor and a teacher, but also a good friend. I am sure most of the students from that era are telling you the same thing."

"I can't count the number of times we went to his home to play hearts, or the many picnics we went to. There were usually about six to 10 of us, and we just included him in the group like he was another student. Probably at our age, that was the highest compliment we could have paid him."

"Whenever we had a problem, from getting out the Collegian to problems with our current date, Chief was always there for us. If we were upset, he'd sense it, and we'd talk. When we did well, he was always the first to praise. We really were his extended family."

"Although Chief has been gone a long time, I still think of him with great fondness. He played a very important role in our lives at K-State."

Helen Hostetter

HAROLD MYERS, FALL 1953 EDITOR

"Ms. Hostetter introduced me to newspaper writing. Readable writing was an important thing she taught me."

JOAN COBBLE, FALL 1961 EDITOR

"Helen Hostetter was a sweet woman. She was very active with us women. She was very good with us and backed us women in that field."

GLENNYS (RUNQUIST) McPHILIMY, SUMMER 1962 EDITOR

"She advised me to go for a double major in Home Ec Journalism so I would have a field of expertise as well as journalistic skills. She was my cheerleader for four years."

Russ Thackrey

JAMES MILLER, FALL 1943 EDITOR

"He was a wonderful guy who had a broad knowledge of things going on in the world. He had a good, moral idea of how newspapers should be."

Ralph Lashbrook

DICK DODDERIDGE, A COLLEGIAN SPORTS EDITOR

"I see him every time I come back, and I'm amazed at how little he's changed."

"He was very supportive and gave students ample opportunities to do their own thing and make their own mistakes."

"We would turn in our stringbooks every so often, and he would go through and grade the stories. We knew pretty much how we stood, and what we were doing."

Fighting for advisers — an all-night party — fighting administration — April Fool's edition

BETTY OMER CREEK, FALL 1950 EDITOR

"I was the first woman editor on the daily. It was funny. My parents weren't sure this was a proper profession for a woman. You had to be hard-driven, cigarette-smoking reporters. It was a man's world then.

"It was one of the hardest semesters I ever worked. I maintained a B average, and got a letter from Ralph Lashbrook commending me.

"Eisenhower was president then. Lashbrook told me there was no money for a faculty adviser. He said, 'It's out of my hands. It came down from the President's office.' So I went to see Eisenhower to appeal it.

"Who sent you here?" he asked. Afterwards, I went back, and I didn't think I got it. Then the next day, Lashbrook called me into his office and said, 'You did it, didn't you? Well, you got your adviser.'"

COLLEEN SMITH TRUELSON, SPRING 1975 BUSINESS MANAGER

"I remember early mornings stuffing inserts. What used to happen was with color, we'd run one section, then run another and stuff it into the first section. That was only if the paper was over 24 pages, and it happened at most three times a year.

"Our last edition as seniors, it was an all-night party. The typos must have been dreadful.

"It was shameful. It was our last edition, and everyone was drinking except me and one other person on the rim. We were trying to be responsible and get the paper out. The party went on all morning. Everyone was just wild, but I'm sure we got it out on time. We all grew up to be respectable journalists, I promise."

PHILIP MEYER, SPRING 1952 EDITOR

"There was a controversy over the design of the new student Union. It was paid for by student fees, and some students in the Department of Architecture thought they should have a voice in how it was designed.

"I interviewed some of the architecture professors, who said most of the design on campus was terrible. Back then the building design was controlled by the state architect.

"The Dean of Engineering and Architecture had a meeting of all the professors to tell them not to talk to reporters, which violated their constitutional right to free speech. I snuck into the meeting — disguised as faculty by wearing a necktie.

"When President McCain found I'd been at the meeting, he delayed publication of the Collegian for about 15 minutes while he decided what to do. He finally decided he'd get worse coverage from the state newspapers by doing that. Five members of the faculty didn't get their contracts renewed, one was just about to get tenure."

JIM BELL, SUMMER 1953 EDITOR

"I had a great time. In those days, we worried a lot less about grades and a lot more about the paper. There were a lot of nights we were there until three in the morning, having a great time."

"The April Fool's edition was the one day a year you could forget about the news and do whatever you wanted."

"I did learn a great journalism lesson as a reporter. After we beat KU in basketball one year, there was a big bonfire in Aggieville. A lot of people were celebrating, and the cops came down to watch and make sure everything was OK.

"There was a guy who got hurt by the name of Hall. I got his name from the police, verified his name and hometown in the phone book and wrote the story. The next day, a guy named Hull, who had the same first name and year in school called up. I had gotten the wrong guy. I learned a lot from that."

A basketball photo — K-State's Centennial Celebration — Collegian as family

Lt. Col. Morris Briggs was the head photographer for the Collegian and Royal Purple in 1951. He won an award for a photograph never printed in the Collegian.

"We used 4x5 Speed Graphics in those days with large flashbulbs. I also used a side flash to provide better fill-in light. I was badly burned in the palm of my hand while inserting a flashbulb. The team doctor treated me in the training room, and I returned to the gym floor to take the shot.

"While attending the SDX National Convention in Miami, where I received my award, I caught my suit on fire just before I was called to the podium. A pitcher of water extinguished the fire, but my coat and trousers were still smoking as I made my way up to and back of the podium.

"The wife of the editor of the Atlanta Constitution was sitting just behind me and stated, 'You certainly know how to get attention.'"

KEN KINGSLEY, SPRING 1964 BUSINESS MANAGER

"The Centennial Celebration issue of the Collegian in February 1963 created a lot of extra work for the staff, but it brought us closer together and provided some new experiences. I, for example, wrote many of the articles dealing with 100 years of intercollegiate sports at K-State. I had previously had no experience as a sport writer.

"I enjoyed working on the annual April Fools edition of the Collegian. One year we altered a photo of the campus smokestack with a story about its collapse the night before. We watched with glee as people picked up a copy and rushed out to see the devastation. Another issue was censored (and pulled off the stand) by University administration. It seems an article that attributed authorship of popular novels to well-known campus individuals was considered in poor taste.

"My semester as advertising manager was memorable, as well. Our sales staff worked on several special issues of the Collegian, coming up with such 'new' ideas as 'theme' issues to stimulate sales.

"One year the Collegian staff worked together on a float for homecoming. We were up all night putting it together at a local car dealership. The night was made more bearable by a bucket of 'purple passion.'"

DONNA STANDLEY FLOOD, FALL 1975 ADVERTISING MANAGER

"I think I would have been lost without the Collegian. I got an apartment off campus and didn't realize how isolated you'd be. It gave me an extra group of friends I wouldn't have had otherwise."

Learning to write — good friends — a.m. stuffing sessions — late hours

D. ALICE SKY, FALL 1981 EDITOR

"Mostly the late hours and early mornings stand out. At their peak, I would sleep a couple of hours in the office before morning classes."

JAMES PARRISH, FALL 1969 EDITOR

"The major events were numerous. We had the burning of Nichols Gymnasium and the burning of draft cards. On, Oct. 15, 1969, the campus citizens and citizens of Manhattan participated in a Vietnam War Moratorium (and the follow-up moratorium march on Washington D.C. in November and another one in December.

"We editorialized on the front page of the Collegian, using a format that had never been used before.

"During my experience working on the Collegian, we saw major national speakers such as Nelson Rockefeller, Hubert Humphrey, General William Westmoreland and Bobby Kennedy. Fall 1969 won an All-American rating from the ACP.

"It's hard to choose among many memorable experiences except to say that when I worked as news editor and editor, the collective experience will dominate my memory forever. I was given the opportunity to be creative while at the same time be a manager. We produced creative front pages and editorial pages. We used big pictures like never before. We used meaningful pictures to help convey poignant messages. We worked tirelessly, day and night to produce quality journalism with a creative flair. The talented people I met and with whom I worked during this time period provided me with a priceless, memorable experience."

JAMES MILLER, FALL 1943 EDITOR

"The close, routine with good friends and associates. We put issues to bed at the Mercury Chronicles plant. I was called away one night in my blue jeans to "stand up" with good friends, who were married at the court house. They were freshman then, now, after 55 years, they are still happily together."

BRIAN J. LARUE, SUMMER 1983 EDITOR

"Watching the 1982 Independence Bowl game at Dr. Dave Adams house. Memberships in SPJ, SDC and SCJ. Being invited to President Acker's office to discuss campus issues. The quote board. Working with great, dedicated people and learning a lot about the University. Long hours."

GLENNYS MCPHILMY, SUMMER 1962 EDITOR

"Putting out the centennial edition. Working every night until 2 a.m. with the liveliest group of people on campus."

DICK DODDERIDGE, A COLLEGIAN SPORTS EDITOR

"I thought one of the most significant things was from the first day, freshman could get published in the Collegian. I was impressed that you could start out right away and get a lot of experience."

"We had a trained journalist as president. He was interested in journalism. It's rare to have a trained journalist as president of the school."

"I started learning the first day I arrived. I was pretty much a neophyte."

"We had a tremendous camaraderie. We worked nights and weekends. Even though we only came out twice a week, it still seemed like a full-time job."

SHARON STAUFFER GOLDSWORTHY, 1965

"Most of us making our way through K-State in the 1960s as journalism majors put in time on the Collegian. Our introduction to the daily usually began because of an interest in filling a notebook with clips to satisfy Reporting I and II instructors, so my recollections of days in Kedzie mingle coursework with Collegian assignments.

"When I arrived on campus in the summer of 1961 to preregister, Ralph Lashbrook signed off on a class registration card that plunged me into journalism courses my first semester. The introductory courses were Graphics and Typography, and it was under the direction of Professor Ellis in the upstairs typolab that I became acquainted with the California job case and learned much about the unforgiving nature of lead type.

"It proved good grounding for a later semester in which I served as a daily editor on the Collegian. Early each Monday morning I stood in the Kedzie basement, silently praying and fervently hoping that headline counts and line spacing would indeed fit. Otherwise, it was back to rewriting headlines or cutting stories or figuring out ways to stretch them. I carried that anxiety about headline counts well into my career on newspapers. It was with considerable relief in 1990 that I discovered the Macintosh and its delivery of "rubbery type."

"Spring semester brought Reporting I and the opportunity to write for the Collegian. While class attendance, participation, writing exercises and tests accounted for some of our grade, the real measure was how many inches of Collegian space we could paste onto pages in our clipbook. We found our assignments on a story list thumbtacked to a newsroom bulletin board.

"The topics tended to run to features, not hard news. My first byline appeared at the top of about six inches of revelation on what fashionable coeds would be wearing when warm weather arrived in Kansas.

"That summer, four of the Reporting I vets stuck around for summer school and Reporting II. It was the best of all possible student-journalist worlds. Lashbrook conducted class in his office (five mornings a week unless he had more compelling obligations), and we were the entire writing staff for the summer version of the Collegian. The weekly publication provided a more leisurely pace for writing, rewriting and getting a taste of pulling inside pages together.

"That experience led to my accepting one of the five daily editor positions in the fall of my sophomore year. It was a memorable year but for all the wrong reasons. I quickly realized that writing headlines was different than writing stories. The Monday paper became a Sunday night ordeal when blank dummy pages demanded more layout skill and headline aptitude than I brought to the desk. Fortunately, the patience and guidance of the executive editor and the tolerance of the print shop staff got all of us through it.

"The late Sunday night hours did bring me to a rapid change in housing arrangements. The Kedzie crew tended to be night people and after coming to an amicable parting of the ways with a housemother, I obtained permission from the Dean of Women to move off campus. Into an apartment. Without roommates or housemothers. Or curfew. Please note this was 1962 when the University exercised its responsibility for the well-being of coeds by taking extensive measures to confine and restrain them. To the Collegian and the Kedzie Kapers, I am indebted for circumstances of independence which made college life a lot more interesting.

"There are other moments which stand strong in memory: the marvelous smell of newsprint and ink from the basement that filled the building; the creaky wooden floors of the old Kedzie section; the stunned silence of the would-be journalists who clustered around the wire machine on a cold November afternoon in 1963 for the latest words on the tragedy in Dallas; a reporting class session in which Ellis offered only 10 words: "Accuracy. Accuracy. Accuracy. And the greatest of these is Accuracy." He then closed his notes and left the room.

"Swinging by Kedzie on the way to 1 p.m. classes for the "hot off the press" first copies of the Collegian each day; the exposure to so many journalists and newsmakers via the 4 p.m. Thursday mandatory lectures which not even the executive editor of the Collegian might avoid more than once a semester; the daring satire and near-sacrilege of two columnists whose names elude me but whose faces and irreverence are still vivid; the Collegian photo coverage of the burning of Nichols gym ... and so much more."

COLLEEN SMITH TRUELSON, SPRING 1974 AD MANAGER

"What used to happen with color is we'd run a section, then run another and then stuff the sections by hand. But that was only if the paper was over 24 pages, it happened maybe three times a year."

LAURA SCOTT, SUMMER 1970 EDITOR

"I think during those times, people came from different directions; we had a wide variety of people. People just worked together to put out a good product.

"We partied together, worked together. We had people who I'm sure must have been part of the drug culture, and we had sorority-fraternity types.

"We used to string big pieces of newsprint announcing Kedzie Kapers around the newsroom. At the beginning of one year, it was a joke that I would perform the famous dance of the reptiles. By the end of the year, it had turned into my snakesdance, which, of course, I never performed."

"The '60s were the most fantastic time to be in college."

SUE GOSS SAUNDERS, FALL 1957 AND SPRING 1958 EDITOR

"There was a professor opening at K-State years after I left. I came back, and the nice-looking, well-dressed Dean of Students took me on a tour of the pressroom. It was 50 times bigger than what I knew.

"Ralph was still in charge of the of the pressroom, and when the dean introduced me I said, 'My God, yes, he taught me every swear word I know.'"

KAY COLES, SUMMER 1977 EDITOR

"Specifically, I remember a series I wrote that started right after school started. A bunch of bar owners got together and fixed the price of beer in Aggieville.

"One of the bar owners called and threatened us with a libel suit. One in particular got really riled up."

memories

ACP awards — working for free speech — no-pants rule for women — newsroom parties

GARY SWANSON, FALL 1954 EDITOR

"The thing I was most proud of was it was five or six years since the ACP named us an all-American paper. We committed ourselves to be an all-American in fall 1955, and we achieved that goal.

"The camaraderie was probably greater then. We had a small coterie of 15 people who made things happen. One of the primary things was taking on the college administration on things we didn't like.

"Back then, they didn't put the profs names on the line schedules. We railed against that and got the names on the line schedules.

DELMAR HATESOHL, EDITOR SUMMER 1950

"I remember the gentleman who supervised the back shop. When you took a proof page back to correct a careless mistake, he would frown at you and say, 'Who does that kind of work?'"

ANDREA CARVER WICHMAN, SUMMER 1978 AD MANAGER

"Douglas Daniels put a mouse or hamster (named Wilbur after Mr. Brown) in my mailbox and nailed wire over the opening. There were lots of late nights and laughs.

"There was a controversy over an ad for a gay group on campus that read, 'Friday is wear jeans if you're gay day.' The ad ran in paper. Another group wanted to run an ad that said 'Friday is play on the freeway if your gay day.' I can't remember what we did.

"When I was ad manager, we proofed a full-page ad for "Food-4-less." I proofed the ad and sent it downstairs. The next day, the headline said "4-less-food." Mr. Brown as really cool, and so was the Food-4-Less manager. He said they'd received more comments on that ad than any other."

LAJEAN RAU, SUMMER 1993 EDITOR

"I'm proud of all the work of Student pubbers and Collegianites toward free speech and a good working relationship between the Collegian and the Royal Purple and the rest of the University.

"Much work went into getting the money that continues to make K-State's student publications top-notch. And much work goes on every day toward maintaining the Collegian and Royal Purple's good relationship with the University community and the freedom and independence to produce good quality work for their readers.

"Finally, I am proud of the practical skills I learned at the Collegian. Reporting and editing skills and skills for delegating people and bringing out the best in other people and myself."

RALPH SALISBURY, SUMMER 1948 EDITOR

"I was editor as well as editor of RP. Chief Medlin said never before, never again."

"We had the belief that students, not quality faculty or research, were the most important part of a university. Were it not for us, the faculty would be unemployed. Students should have favored status over faculty in parking, tickets and everything. Out editorials, and sometimes slanted feature stories, reflected this belief. When I graduated and became employed at a university, it took about one month to reverse all these notions."

"In those days, women had very severe hours. We had to be in the dorms by 9 p.m., and later on weekends. I was one of the few senior women allowed to have a key to my sorority house because working at the Collegian, it was impossible to get in before 9.

"We were not allowed to wear pants on campus. I remember trudging from the Pi Phi house across a field and freezing. Those were the things we should have been yelling about. The temperature had to be 10 degrees before we could wear pants. There were a lot of 20, 30-degree days that were probably colder with the windchill.

"I do remember partying in the newsroom. There was just a different atmosphere; people smoking cigarettes, people bringing guitars, drinking wine and goofing off in one room while the rest of the people put the paper out.

"There was a hole in the floor from the dark room through to the newsroom, and they used to shoot bottle rockets through the floor. I remember them shooting bottle rockets up the stairs.

"Whenever we had storms or tornadoes, we'd go on the roof to watch. We had demo albums, and we'd throw them like frisbees at the Union.

"There was more wildness in the newsroom because people turned a blind eye to it.

Wildcats meet new coach, discuss plans

Dan Lewerenz
contributing writer

Cindy Fox, assistant athletic director and senior women's administrator, said she wanted the best in hiring a new women's basketball coach. From the looks of things, she's been successful.

Debbie Patterson, the top assistant coach and recruiting coordinator for Vanderbilt, will be introduced at 11 this morning as the Wildcats' new coach.

"We're just ecstatic about having Debbie as our coach," Fox said. "She's incredible — everything we were looking for."

Patterson met with players last night to discuss goals and expectations for the coming season.

"She's very positive, very knowledgeable, and she really wants to build a program here," junior guard Missy Decker said. "That's very appealing to all of us, and I'm sure it was appealing to the administration."

"We really didn't talk X's and O's. We talked about what she was expecting from us. We talked about our roles on the team."

Freshman forward Jenny Coalson said she was looking forward to working with Patterson.

"I think she had a lot of good things to say about building the women's basketball program here, and I'm looking forward to getting into the season to really get a feel for her system," Coalson said.

Patterson spent the last four years at Vanderbilt, helping the Commodores to a 106-26 (.803) record and four consecutive NCAA Tournament appearances. They reached the Sweet 16 all four times, including an Elite Eight appearance this year and a Final Four berth in 1993.

Senators discuss restructuring bill for SGA funding

Courtney Marshall
staff writer

The 1995-96 Student Senate ended on a somewhat controversial note Thursday night.

The bill in question was the restructuring of the SGA funding guidelines. The bill was originally submitted by the Allocations Committee.

After several committee members and senators debated the bill, John Potter, Senate chair, determined the bill was illegitimate because a quorum was not present at the allocations meeting that sent the bill back to the Senate floor.

"According to our by-laws, five members are necessary for a quorum for Allocations Committee, and at this time if three members were present at that meeting, in the chair's opinion, this bill is not legitimate," Potter said.

After it was determined the bill was not legitimate, Kelley Fink, interim coordinator, suggested the bill be sent back to the Allocations Committee during the Senate meeting for a decision. Time was

Police question suspect on possible rape charge

Cari Cornelson
city/government editor

A Manhattan woman in her early 40s was raped at about 2 p.m. Wednesday on the northeast side of Tuttle Creek Dam.

Investigators questioned a subject Wednesday evening who might be associated with a number of sexual assaults that occurred in the area, Investigator Gerald Schmitt of Pottawatomie County said.

One victim was assaulted Feb. 21 in Linear Park in Manhattan.

A second victim was assaulted Oct. 22, 1995, in the River Pond Area at Tuttle Creek Park.

A third victim was assaulted in October near Keats.

Wednesday's victim was sexually assaulted below the parking lot west of the spillway in an area not visible from the road or parking lot, Schmitt said. The victim notified a deputy who was in the area for a funeral escort, he said.

Family, friends mourn victims' deaths 1 year later

BRIGHT GREEN BLADES OF GRASS ARE NOW GROWING WHERE 168 DEAD ONCE LAY.

It is one year after the bombing attack on Oklahoma City. Still silence pervades the air where the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building once stood.

Oklahoma and America are still dealing with the aftershocks.

Earlier this week, Marvin Buckner, Oklahoma City resident, quietly stood on the outskirts of a crowded wire fence surrounding the site.

Tall, black and somber, for the first time Buckner was visiting the place where his sister had died last year.

"I just didn't want to," he shrugged.

Hundreds of high school students visiting the site during a break in their Future Homemakers of America conference seemed to be tip-toeing around the wire fence that Buckner continued to stare through.

Buckner, like many, was avoiding the people, the press and the possible memories of visiting the site. He pointed to a newly created board of pictures, which vividly displayed the building before, during and after the bombing, and frowned.

"I don't like the pictures," he said.

Many victims' survivors don't like the board. They say it doesn't need to be there. The site speaks for itself.

► WOMEN'S ISSUES

Women fill different roles around world

AbdulNaser T. Abdullah
staff reporter

A diverse audience gathered Thursday to listen to a discussion about women around the world and the problems they face.

Maria Flaminio from Brazil talked about women in her country.

"Women have an important role in the Brazilian society," Flaminio said.

Women in Brazil are not only mothers and wives but also doctors and professors, Flaminio said.

"Women occupy 50 percent of the university seats," Flaminio said.

In the poor families, women have to hold more than one job, she said.

"It is not hard for those who remember God," Flaminio said.

There is a feminist movement in Brazil that is concentrating on achieving wage equality, she said.

Flaminio said divorce has become very popular in Brazil. Many single-parent families are appearing, and mostly women are the heads of these families, she said.

Minakshi Tikoo from India made a presentation about women in India.

"On one side we have oppression of women, but on the other side, we were the first country to have a woman prime minister," Tikoo said.

Tikoo said that the main problem in India is that women do not know what their rights are.

A woman must reach a certain position to be respected by everybody, she said.

The health standards are low in India, Tikoo said.

► POLICE ARREST 16-YEAR-OLD YOUTH IN K.C. SHOOTING RAMPAGE

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Police have arrested a 16-year-old boy in a shooting rampage that killed two people, including a pregnant 15-year-old girl, and injured three others.

Officer Russ Dykstra said this morning that the boy was one of two suspects in the shootings. No motive had been determined, Dykstra said.

Police said Tina Kelso, who was four months pregnant, was found shot to death around 2 a.m. Wednesday inside a house on the city's east side. A friend of the Kelso family, Glen Armstead, 33, was found nearby. He was treated for a gunshot wound to the leg and released.

Officers later found the body of Mark Carmichael, 30, in a vehicle in an alley near the house. Carmichael was Tina Kelso's cousin.

Linda Kelso, 36, Tina's mother, was in critical but stable condition Wednesday night with a gunshot wound.

Tina's sister, Misty Kelso, 17, was treated for two gunshot wounds and a knife wound to her throat, and released.

Police Sgt. Tim Witcig said police believe the incident began when one suspect lured Carmichael to an apparently stolen Jeep Cherokee and shot him.

About the same time, the second suspect was sitting on the front porch of the house with Misty Kelso. He pulled a knife and slashed her throat, Witcig said.

The girl ran down the street, but both suspects chased her and fired guns at her. She was hit twice, Witcig said.

The suspects then turned and returned to the house. Tina Kelso saw the men approaching and ran inside the house. She locked the door and went into a back bedroom.

"The two suspects entered the rear door and began firing rounds into the bedroom door," Witcig said. "At least one bullet hit Tina in the head and killed her. Glen and Linda were hit by bullets coming through the door."

Dykstra could not say what role police suspect the 16-year-old of playing. No charges had been filed as of this morning.

► MENENDEZES WANT NEW TRIAL

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A day after a jury recommended life in prison for Erik and Lyle Menendez, defense lawyers Thursday said they would base their request for a new trial on numerous rulings by the trial judge.

Attorney Leslie Abramson said her motion would challenge many of Superior Court Judge Stanley Weisberg's decisions, such as having a single jury hear the case and limiting testimony about sexual and psychological abuse.

But the focus of the defense attack, according to Abramson and co-counsel Barry Levin, will be the judge's elimination of two jury instructions that changed the trial's focus.

"That's why we asked for so much time," Abramson said.

Weisberg has granted her request for a nearly three-month delay before sentencing, which is now set for July 2. The brothers were convicted last month of first-degree, premeditated murder in the 1989 killings of their wealthy parents, Jose and Kitty Menendez.

On Wednesday, jurors rejected the death penalty and recommended life in prison with no possibility of parole.

In the trial's final days, Weisberg barred a defense claim of imperfect self-defense and refused to instruct jurors that the slaying of Kitty Menendez could be manslaughter rather than murder.

Imperfect self-defense holds that a killing by one who believes he is in danger can be justifiable even if that belief is unreasonable.

Police reports

Reports are taken directly from the daily logs of the campus and Riley County police departments. Because of space constraints, we do not list wheellocks, calls for escorts or minor traffic violations.

CORRECTIONS

► In Thursday's Collegian, the KSU Telefund was misidentified as being organized by the Alumni Association. The KSU Foundation organized the Telefund.

Also, the Collegian incorrectly misspelled the name of Kirk Baughan, director of the Telefund.

► In Monday's Collegian, the Riley County Police Department's April 13 report said that at 1:19 a.m., there was a subject with a gun at Bombers. In fact, the police never found any subjects with a gun at Bombers upon responding.

In an unrelated incident, the police at that time arrested Victor A. Copeland, 1919 Northwind Drive, Junction City, and Matthew Muse, 2437 Rippley St., Topeka, for battery and resisting arrest at Bombers. Muse was also charged with unlawful use of an ID and curfew. He was released to his aunt. Neither subjects possessed a gun as suggested by a previous Collegian report.

The Collegian regrets these errors.

► NATIVE AMERICAN STUDENTS

7th powwow to showcase native life

Mikki Tice
staff reporter

Dancing, food and festive costumes will be seen at 1 p.m. this Saturday in Ahearn Field House as the Native American Student Body presents its seventh annual powwow.

Clyde Henderson, adviser of NASB, said the powwow will begin with a grand entry starting at 1 p.m. and another grand entry at 7 p.m.

"The grand entry is when all the dancers enter the ring at one time," Henderson said. "The dancers will be paying a tribute to the head staff Native Americans who are the masters of ceremony."

He said it is an honor to be a head staff and this person is selected by reputation. The head staff can be a woman or man and comes from the region.

The powwow will be an exciting event that students can use to become educated about Native American dances, traditional food and culture, Henderson said.

"The powwow offers a variety of different dances and is considered an intertribal social event," Henderson said. "One of the dances the audience will see is the fancy dance."

He said the outfits for the fast-paced fancy dance are usually colorful with feathers, but they can be made from other material.

"The women's gingle dance is a dance designed to heal the sick," Chris Hall, treasurer of NASB, said. "The outfit is designed with approximately 360 gingles on the dress." The powwow is a gathering of different nations with dancing, singing and food.

"Men's traditional dance is the oldest form. The men wear buffles of eagle feathers and depict various stories through their dancing," Hall said.

"The women's fancy dance originated in the Wild West shows depicting what the prairie looked like," Hall said.

"This dance shows agility and balance, and the dancers wear Southern cloth and buckskin."

Along with the powwow, NASB will be selling Indian tacos, which are Indian fry bread topped with lettuce, tomato, onions, salsa, beans and meat.

These tacos will sell for about $3 and can be purchased at the powwow, Henderson said.

Travis Blackbird, president of NASB, said he hopes there will be a good turn out and everyone enjoys themselves, along with being educated about Native Americans.

Gilbert poses for Chan Wednesday in a hallway of the Holiday Inn Holidome. Chan was in town Tuesday and Wednesday to photograph candidates for Playboy magazine's Women of the Big 12 issue, which will be published in September.

When Playboy comes calling

■ Women in swimwear compete for honor of being in special Big 12 issue

Mary Renee Smith

David Chan will see more than 1,200 women from the Big 12 in their swimsuits or less over the next few months.

As the photographer for Playboy magazine's Women of the Big 12 issue, Chan gets a unique view of the new conference.

The Women of the Big 12 issue, on newsstands in mid-September, will contain students selected from searches conducted at each school.

More than 90 female Kansas State University students came to the Playboy suite of the Holiday Inn Holidome April 16 and 17, hoping to be selected to represent K-State.

At times, the room was filled with women in flannel robes filling out forms and waiting to have their pictures taken.

Nude photos were not taken; candidates appeared in their swimsuits for this stage of the application process.

The application contains more than pictures.

A short biography asking the applicant to provide interesting comments about herself or her family in addition to year in school and major is also part of the application.

Usually the face and then the body. Sparkling eyes will help out a lot. Something that sings out, "Hello."

DAVID CHAN
PLAYBOY PHOTOGRAPHER

KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Jennifer Gilbert, junior in elementary education, and Playboy photographer David Chan look over the three Polaroid pictures Chan took. The pictures and a short biography will be sent to editors, who will choose three or four students to possibly appear in Playboy's pictorial.

Proof of age and proof of being a current student is required before being accepted as a candidate.

Karen Lynn, photo stylist and assistant to Chan, said the corporate office is very thorough in verifying the age and student status of each candidate.

The complete applications are sent to Chicago for final selection.

Chan said he and the editors make the selections.

They read the biography and look at the Polaroids for the women who stand out.

"Usually the face and then the body. Sparkling eyes will help a lot. Something that sings out, 'Hello,'" he said.

Four students will be selected from K-State. These women will be notified in the next two weeks.

Once selected, the women have the choice of whether to appear nude, semi-nude or clothed.

Women who appear nude will be paid more than those who appear semi-nude.

Semi-nude models will be paid more than those who appear clothed.

Although women have the choice, Playboy would prefer the women appear nude. "We're not selling clothing," Lynn said.

Brandi Vandenbrink, sophomore in art therapy, said she would appear nude.

"I have enough self-confidence to know I can do it."

KYLE WYATT
Collegian

Brandy Vandenbrink, standing, sophomore in art therapy, looks through an issue of Playboy while Amanda Lagoski, freshman in psychology, fills out a short biography Wednesday afternoon.

This was an opportunity she did not want to pass up, she said.

The opportunities that can come from being in Playboy are what brought Rebecca Swan to the Playboy suite.

"A lot of doors can open from being in Playboy. You can get all kinds of offers," she said.

Playboy will do the photo shoots in early summer, but even getting to participate in a shoot is no guarantee the women will appear in the issue.

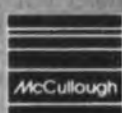

There are many women and a limited amount of space, and it would be hard to fit everyone in, Chan said.

Jumping to conclusions the wrong response

QUICKread

► Let us not forget the lessons of the Oklahoma City bombing by not jumping to conclusions about others.

Minutes after an explosion ripped through the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City, a Muslim was pulled over in a neighboring town. Instantly, the media led a clarion call proclaiming the bombing as a terrorist act led by a Muslim faction. Days later, the media retracted the statement.

At 9:02 a.m., a year will have passed since the explosion that killed 168 men, women and children.

What have we learned in that year? Terrorism happens in America, and people die. In need of someone to blame for the deaths, people often leap at the first suspects.

Last year, it was the Muslims. Today, after the sagas of Timothy McVeigh, militias, the Freemen and the Unabomber have been uncovered, we assume terrorism culprits are some armed redneck, rag-tag, right-wing bunch of backwater people.

A year after the explosion, we still haven't learned. Terrorism can come from anywhere. It can be John Doe mowing his yard down the street or Jane Doe selling lottery tickets at the neighborhood convenience store.

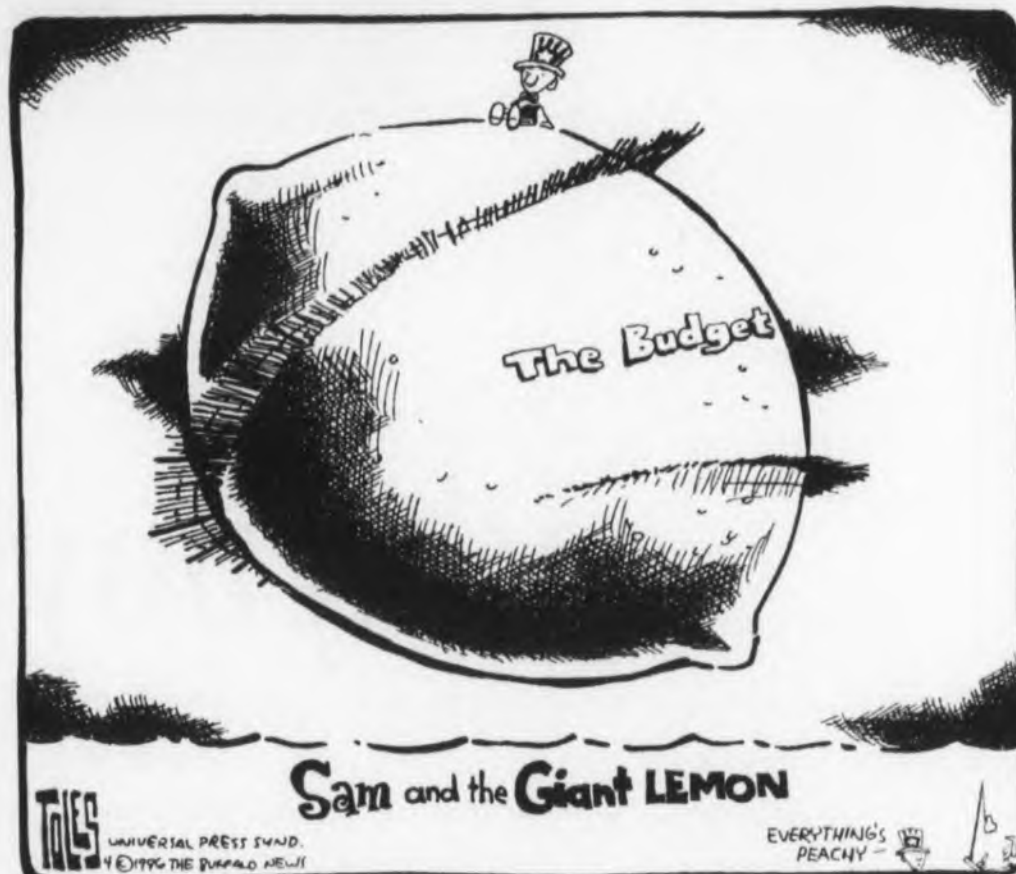

But during the silence echoing through the streets of downtown Oklahoma City, it doesn't matter.

Lives were lost. Lives were altered.

Today, take a moment and think. Not just about the lives that were changed and the angry and sorrowful ties you felt as you watched it on CNN or read the newspapers.

During the silence, think about how quick people were to blame others without knowing the facts. Blame without reason can be even more dangerous than the threat of domestic terrorism.

TOLES

The risks don't matter

I smoke roughly a pack a day. Why?
Because I'm addicted to nicotine.

Myview

LACH FRANQUEMONT

I continue to smoke quite willingly, even though I know the health risks and realize I could save $50 a month by not doing so. I started when I was 18 and have smoked ever since. This does not mean I advocate others to start smoking or that I mind refraining from smoking when others would prefer I didn't. I consider it one of my rights to smoke only as long as I don't infringe on the rights of others.

While I am unwilling to quit, however, I derive no joy from seeing others sucked into this habit. It is for this reason I deplore the efforts of the large tobacco companies who attempt to glamorize smoking.

Much of this glamorization is aimed at children. Victor Crawford, a tobacco lobbyist who died of lung and throat cancer last month, said, "If you stop kids from smoking, in 20 years you're out of business... Our job was to hold the front."

Recently, though, the tobacco industry has been under attack by both the media and through grassroots anti-smoking efforts. On the national level, Food and Drug Commissioner David Kessler has waged a campaign to have nicotine classified as a drug and regulated as such.

For his efforts House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., has called Kessler, "... a bully and a thug." Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., has promised to fire Kessler if elected president. Among the Democrats, Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., has lobbied the Clinton administration to rein in Kessler.

Why the fuss? Because all three of these men, and numerous other politicians nationwide, receive huge sums of campaign contributions every year from the tobacco industry.

Last year, according to the May/June issue of Mother Jones, the Republican Party received $2.4 million from the tobacco industry. In fact, the two largest individual donors were Philip Morris with $975,149 and RJR Nabisco with $696,450.

The strange thing with the contributions to the Republican Party is tobacco companies want more centralized control over tobacco laws, while the Republicans are generally perceived to be for less federal intervention and more control at the state and local level.

The advantages tobacco companies see in centralized control can be illustrated by the following. In 1994, Proposition 188, called the Tobacco Control Act, was proposed in California. On the surface, it seemed to place restrictions on tobacco, but what it actually did was supersede many tougher local restrictions. Luckily, when it was exposed for what it was, California voters rejected it.

This is illustrative of what the tobacco industry's strategy is. They would like to use federal and state laws to override any grassroots anti-smoking campaigns.

It could just happen, too. As the public becomes further disenchanted with smoking, and more and more of the lies told by the tobacco industry are exposed, the political chips built up by all of those campaign contributions are going to come due. We as a public must insist our politicians vote in our best interest and not to satisfy their campaign offers.

I, however, remain guilty by being a consumer of cigarettes. As much as I would like to say I will quit, I know I won't. Let us make sure, though, others don't fall into this trap.

Lach Franquemont is a sophomore in physics and philosophy.

MATT HAWKINS

Will we ever forget?

The Oklahoma City bombing had an effect on all of us. There are images we will never forget.

We will never forget the images flashed on our TV screens — of children and adults bloodied, injured and carried on stretchers.

Who will ever forget the picture of a fireman cradling little Baylee Almon, a photo which was on the front page of almost every newspaper in the country and all over the world? That picture came to symbolize the tragedy of the bombing.

Who will ever forget the images of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, the whole front part torn away by the blast? Who will ever forget the scenes of the rescue workers combing through the building, looking for the injured and the dead?

Who will ever forget the stories of the grieving families or stories of the people that, to this day, are still recovering?

Who will ever forget how people outside jeered when Timothy McVeigh was transferred to another prison?

We all had a sense of outrage over the bombing, especially over the deaths of 19 children.

Those people are still recovering, and the families still grieve over their loved ones. We have not forgotten them, nor will we ever forget these images or stories.

As a journalism student, I have another viewpoint of the bombing, though it may be similar to others who aren't in any way connected to journalism.

Was it really in good taste to show those images, especially the picture of Baylee Almon? Did it violate the privacy of her family? Opinions on that are mixed. Some would say it violated the privacy of her family. Others would say it symbolized the tragedy of it all.

As I watched the coverage of the bombing, I remember most of the journalists covering it or talking about it had tears in their eyes. I think we were sad and wondered why it happened. We still do, even to this day.

Even now, one year later, many of us remember where we were, and what we were doing when we found out about the bombing.

We will still remember five, 10, maybe 20 years down the line. Like the Kennedy assassination and the Challenger tragedy, April 19 will always be a day that lives in our minds.

Every April 19, we will take time to mourn the dead and hope the families of the dead are doing as well as can be expected. We will also hope the injured recover and that this never happens again.

Janet Blanchat is a senior in broadcast journalism.

► LAFENE SHOULD LOOK AT POLICIES

Editor,

A male friend of mine called Lafene Health Center to set up an appointment and was asked a strange question, "Would you mind seeing a woman doctor?"

This would not have disturbed me as much as it did if the appointment would have been for something such as a full physical exam. However, he was making the appointment to get his eye checked.

I also would not have been bothered by the question if I thought this was asked of both males and females in every situation. I am a female and a frequent user of Lafene, and I know this doesn't happen, except in cases in which females are referred to the Women's Clinic.

I feel the question being stated in such a way implies negative connotations about female doctors and discrimination toward women. I feel this is synonymous with saying, "Would you mind seeing a black doctor?"

I don't know what Lafene's reasons are for asking male patients this question, but I do think it could be done in a more tactful manner, such as, "Do you prefer a male or female doctor?"

'Conservative values' no different than liberal

Myview

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

Therefore, there is almost not a dime's worth of difference between liberal and conservative government policies. The two groups of politicians merely disagree on who will benefit from outrageous spending practices, the under or upper class.

I'm a liberal, and so is Bob Dole.

The senior Kansas senator and I have both been getting a lot of labels slapped on us lately that neither of us are too comfortable with. Political campaign rhetoric is usually rife with polarizing languages, separating contestants into convenient bins of categorization. Lamar Alexander, Steve Forbes and especially Pat Buchanan did their best to paint Dole as a liberal, out of touch with true conservative values, whatever those are.

The truth of the matter, of course, is that neither old Bob nor I are liberals at all. Dole is a moderate conservative, the kind that can get votes from the right, left and center. Me, I'm just a dirty old moderate. That means, basically, everyone will disagree with me at some time.

And that's good. It means you may (and I emphasize "may") actually have a pulse and are thinking for yourself.

The political spectrum has shifted to the right rather dramatically in the last decade or so. Historically, America has always been rather conservative, with a few regional exceptions. But this conservatism has usually been ignored in areas of spending. Pork barrel projects, deficit spending, patronage and corrupt spending practices have been the practices of people of very political stripe at all levels of government, and to a strong degree still are.

That's why all the rhetoric about so-called conservative values really only makes sense to partisan politicians, their supporters and pundits.

After all, what real difference is there between the proposed budgets President Reagan sent to Congress, which were never even closed to being balanced and were dead on arrival, and President Clinton's budgets, which were also unbalanced and had no chance of passage?

What is the difference between Clinton's proposal of a massive government takeover of health care and President Nixon's similar proposal to do the same thing 20 years earlier?

What is the difference between Nixon's attempt to guarantee all Americans a minimum income and President Carter's programs that sought to do the same thing?

And as far as family values go, what is the difference between the intentions of Clinton's Family Leave Act, which made it easier for family members to take care of ailing family members and newborn children without losing their jobs, and the rhetoric from the right demanding that parents take more responsibility for the welfare of their children?

What is the difference between spending trillions over the years on welfare to families and individuals who can't find or don't wish to find work, and spending billions every year subsidizing corporations like Archer Daniels' Midland which, according to the Cato Institute, receives at least 43 percent of its profits from federal subsidies?

Actually, this answer is not rhetorical. The difference is ADM has been contributing millions and millions of dollars to the likes of Dole and House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., while welfare recipients have not. But the other rhetorical questions point out that, in practice, the differences between conservative and liberal politicians are academic and exist only in their own minds and the minds of people who believe them.

Therefore, there is almost not a dime's worth of difference between liberal and conservative government policies. The two groups of politicians merely disagree on who will benefit from outrageous spending practices, the under class or the upper class.

As far as whether I am a liberal or not, well, I'm rather ambivalent about the issue.

When I think of what passes for modern liberal thinkers, I think of Christopher Hitchens, Gloria Steinem, Cornell West, Andrei Codrescu, Andrea Dworkin and Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., all of whom I have had deep and sincere differences of opinion with as, it should be noted, Clinton has.

The fact of the matter is, the typical voter, conservative or not, cannot summarize the views of any of these people. Most Americans can't describe what a true liberal is, but they think would know one if and when they see one.

Thankfully, there is more than one way to define liberalism.

In their times, Jesus, Thomas Jefferson, Frederick Douglass, Theodore Roosevelt and Martin Luther King Jr. were outspoken critics of the status quo and of the governments under which they had to live. Unlike conservative critics, though, they didn't seek to replace the status quo with the status quo ante, but instead each had a new vision of the future that, if enacted, could have made life better for everyone in society.

And they were opposed by conservatives.

If keeping company with these distinguished people means I'm a liberal, so be it.

CHINA SHOULD STOP TRYING TO RULE TAIWAN

Editor,

The article "Chinese community protests coverage" by Kara Rogers in the April 11 Collegian reported many Chinese from the People's Republic of China (PRC) here in Manhattan complained about the U.S. media reports regarding the recent Chinese missile tests and military war games aimed at Taiwan. I feel these Chinese should blame their own government, instead of the U.S. news media.

If their Chinese leaders would play by the rules under international law, to promote peace in the world, and respect human rights and intellectual property rights, then the Chinese here in Manhattan would not need to worry about "bad media coverage" of China.

In the article, Yiping Qiu stated the Taiwanese do not have a right to declare Taiwan independent of China. I understand Qiu's authoritarian way of thinking is not uncommon for a person who grew up in a communist-controlled society. However, I would like to remind him that under international and American law, people have a right to determine their own destiny.

Taiwan Independence should be determined by the people in Taiwan, not by China. As the recent presidential election in Taiwan showed, 75 percent of the total votes went to two of the candidates Lee and Peng who are pro-independence. In a democracy, the majority determines the leadership and direction, not the minority.

Taiwan and China are two different countries separated by the Strait of Taiwan. Taiwan is a fully democratic country with a per-capita income of $11,000, while China is a totalitarian country with per-capita income of $2,200. Taiwan is an open, modern society, while China is currently known for its human-rights abuses. Taiwan is a peace-loving country, while China has had wars with every neighbor, including India, Russian, Vietnam and Korea. Based on these differences, it is not difficult to understand why a large majority of people in Taiwan do not want to be ruled by communist China.

China has repeatedly claimed that Taiwan is its "renegade province," that its military war games against Taiwan are only "internal affairs," and that the U.S. government should back off and leave China alone.

But in reality, the current communist China has never ruled over Taiwan. Both the Taiwanese and Chinese governments have functioned separately and by themselves for more than 45 years. Calling Taiwan a "renegade province" is just as ridiculous as calling Alaska a "renegade state of Russia."

I hope the Chinese leaders will keep their hands off Taiwan and focus their efforts and energy on improving China's human-rights record, and that China will some day become a democratic, friendly and peace-loving country in the Asia-Pacific region.

READER WONDERS WHY A PAGEANT DEFINES A PERSON

Editor,

The Collegian ran a nicely detailed article about the Ms. Kansas Pageant and all of the contestants, most of whom were K-Staters. Though the Collegian was not politically correct by its use of the word "girl," I must use the term in order to make a point.

A new sociological term was coined by a contestant who said she did not see herself as a "pageant girl." I had known before the K-State campus was divided into "sorority girl" and "girl," but now there is another stratified status category of "pageant girl."

One thing did bother me about the article. A woman was interviewed and said the pageant experience gives her a "... sense of who I am." Doesn't that worry the school there is a student who did not know who she was until the pageant? How did she register for classes or check her posted grades? All she would have to do is look at her driver's license. Most states print the individual's name right on the license. What a concept!

Maybe the woman borrows other IDs to gain entry to certain Aggieville establishments and doesn't remember who she is because her identity changes every Friday and Saturday. Multiple Personality Disorder can be ruled out because at least those people know who they are at any given moment, though it changes quickly. The girl's problem is just more reason to eliminate open admission. We cannot be having students here who do not know who they are unless they enter a pageant.

We need to lobby the U.S. Congress and the Kansas Legislature to pass laws mandating parents tell children who they are.

COLLEGIAN SHOULD HAVE USED MORE DISCRETION

Editor,

As a former Collegian editor, it is with great anticipation and pride that I view each copy of "today's" Collegian.

Though much has changed in the world of print journalism since my days in the cramped quarters in Kedzie, some things — and I know this through my current work as a high school journalism teacher — have not changed at all.

Among those things that have not changed are the value — make that the necessity — of getting both sides of every story when reporting, and the importance of using solid journalistic and moral judgment when deciding what words to use — and not to use — in print.

It is with these two principles in mind I write this letter. During my days as a student journalist — in high school and at K-State — I made more than my fair share of mistakes. And I continue to make them as an adviser of a Class 6A journalism program.

But mistakes as those contained in a front page story in the April 16 edition, which recounted the tragic death of a K-State student in a motorcycle accident, are troublesome and worthy of mention.

This story, simply put, was as one-sided a piece of reporting as I have read in recent days. As a high school adviser, I would likely have returned the story to the writer for further work. At no time during my reading of this story did I feel as if the driver of the car got a fair shake.

In addition, the use of the word "fucking" in a quote adds shock value, but very little journalistic value to the piece. The Collegian has never been an ultra-conservative publication, but it has also never been a "tabloid-style rag." The point had been made in fine fashion already. A student died in a motorcycle wreck, and the student did not have his helmet on. Common sense dictates that this message alone should have been chilling enough.

To each and every member of the Collegian family, I leave you this challenge: Please continually endeavor to improve in your work and your standards. We, together, have provided our students quite a legacy through our strict adherence to a set of extremely high standards. And it is those standards that our readers have every right to demand we follow on a daily basis, in each bit of reporting, editing and advising we do.

MANHATTAN NEEDS MANDATORY HELMET LAW

Editor,

Many times, the most important people in one's life are his or her children. Parents will go to great lengths to raise them, not just out of obligation, but out of love. While it is hard for a government to show its love, it similarly has an obligation to care for its citizens and to protect them. Therefore, the safety of our city's children is an issue that must not be overlooked.

You may realize that thousands of Manhattan's youth ride bicycles. However, you probably have not been told that the No. 1 cause of death in children is bicycle accidents. In 89 percent of these fatalities, head trauma was the cause. Studies have shown 70 percent of crashes involving head injuries appear to be potentially survivable with a helmet. However, bicycle helmets are worn by less than 15 percent of children today.

These are scary statistics and illuminate a tremendous problem. It is in these circumstances that government intervention is necessary.

The solution is a city mandate requiring helmets to be worn on all public roads and trails by bicyclists younger than the age of 16. The law would be enforced by the Riley County Police Department and punishable by fines up to $50 for the first offense and $100 for the second. The first citation could be waived if the offender bought a helmet before his or her court date.

The issue of required helmets is not a new one. Nine states now require children to wear bicycle helmets, and bicycle helmet use has increased in these states. Until Kansas joins them, Manhattan could set an example for the rest of the state. Helmets save lives.

The biggest argument against requiring helmets is it infringes on our right to free will. That it does, but doesn't every other law our government has laid down? This is apparent in seat belt laws, speed limits and every other law known to man, including the current city ordinance requiring bicycle headlights at night.

Another argument against the law is it places economic burden on parents. This is just an excuse. When implemented, our city mandate could set up a fund to buy helmets for distribution to low-income families or families involved in the school-lunch program. I would not hesitate to donate helmets to this cause, and I am sure many citizens feel the same way. Also, the EMS Department of Memorial Hospital is currently offering bicycle helmets for sale for only $8.

Most noteworthy is the law releases the burden from parents of having to force their children to wear helmets. Parents can now say, "It is not just me who wants you to wear it. It is the law." While this logic may seem to devalue the issue, the last thing any parent wants to do is put their children in targets for ridicule at vulnerable ages. All of a sudden, wearing a helmet no longer places a kid as an outcast, but children will no longer think twice before strapping on a bicycle helmet. In fact, many helmet manufacturers are now producing eye-appealing helmets with flames, NFL Logos and ones which resemble the helmets worn by mountain bike professionals.

To defend our children's safety, it is vital we take this next step. As the weather begins to warm and you begin to see more children out riding their bikes, hopefully you will be reminded of the constant dangers and consequences of them not wearing helmets. Although we have been slow to consider helmet legislation, it is never too late to start protecting our kids.

► TENNIS

Team ready for final home match

Shane McCormick
contributing writer

The K-State women's tennis team will take to the courts against the Missouri Tigers today. The match will be the last home match for the Wildcats and for senior Karina Kuregian.

Kuregian has established herself as one of the greatest players to play at K-State. She has definitely backed that up this season. Kuregian will bring a 12-match winning streak into the contest against the Tigers.

But missing from the Cats' lineup this weekend will be junior Nikki Lagerstrom. In her match against Colorado on April 14, she suffered a broken bone in her right foot. She had surgery on the foot Wednesday and had a screw inserted to repair the injury. Lagerstrom will miss the remainder of the season.

Even with Lagerstrom out of the lineup, Coach Bietau said he is confident in sophomore Chris Schulte.

"We've tried to be consistent all year about asking people to move up to the next level," he said. "We feel that Chris is well prepared."

Before the injury, Lagerstrom had teamed up with sophomore Dinah Watson to compile a 4-1 record in doubles play. Bietau said Schulte's best play may come in the doubles action.

"Earlier in the year, Chris was playing the best doubles we had seen of her," he said. "Chris has the potential to step up and do a good job."

The overall doubles play of the team has improved over the past couple of weeks. After starting off the season with some surprising losses, the Cats are now over .500 at every position.

During the last five matches, the Cats have won the doubles point in four of those duals.

"If you go back to the beginning of the season and compare it with our recent matches, you'll see some dramatic improvements in doubles," Bietau said.

On Sunday, the Cats will travel to take on the Oklahoma State Cowboys. The Cowboys come into the contest at 11-6 overall and 4-0 in Big 8 play. The Cowboys are currently at No. 50 in the ITA rankings.

The Cats will come into this weekend's contest ranked 47th in the ITA rankings. The ranking is the school's highest, eclipsing last fall's ranking of No. 50.

Rowers winding down season

John Berggren
staff writer

The K-State crew teams will start to wind down their spring season this weekend at Carter Lake in Omaha, Neb.

The Nebraska Invitational Regatta, to be held Sunday, will include teams from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, Iowa State and Drake University.

Crew coach Al Koch said the windy weather this week has once again hampered his team in preparation for the meet.

"We've not been able to get out on the water, and it's hard to see a lot of improvement when you can't get out," Koch said. "It's hard to get ahead of the game when you can't get out on the water."

"We haven't even been able to get on the River Pond on a couple occasions because the water surface has been white-capped."

Koch said despite the lack of quality practice time, his team has still been able to find a way to get better.

"Our novice teams and women's varsity fours teams are still improving," Koch said. "Our varsity women's crew leader, Kim Desch, will miss the rest of the season due to a herniated disk in her back. It will be interesting to see how they react without her."

K-State is coming off the Great Plains Regatta held in Topeka.

Thirty clubs participated in the regatta in which K-State medaled in three events.

The men's fours and women's fours high school teams each took gold medals, and the men's novice eight medaled by taking a bronze.

The rowing teams will wrap up their season next weekend at Madison, Wis., in the Midwest Rowing Championships Regatta.

► BASEBALL

Sooners roll into Manhattan

John Berggren
staff writer

Losing seven out of its last 10 ballgames, the K-State baseball team will try to get things back on track this weekend in a three-game home series with Oklahoma starting tonight at 7.

In the only match-up between the two schools this year, Oklahoma won in a wild game ending in a 13-12 Sooner victory.

The Wildcats' main problems in the last 10 ballgames have centered around inconsistent pitching and hitting.

"We're still waiting for everything to come together," assistant baseball coach Rocky Ward said. "When everything falls together, this team is going to explode, and we hope it is this weekend."

"I'm not sure why our hitting has been so sporadic this year.

After last year and the new athletes we have this year, I thought we'd score more than we are. We're not as disciplined this year when we're at the plate. Our on-base percentage is down from last year, but our batting averages are up."

Currently leading the way for K-State in hitting is Heath Schesser with a .355 batting average. As a team the Cats are batting .304, with seven members batting more than .300.

One bat to watch this weekend will be Chris Hess. With 201 hits, the right fielder is just two away from tying for fourth on K-State's all-time list.

In the Sooners' lineup, watch out for designated hitter Damon Minor. Minor leads the team in home runs with 12 and RBIs with 52 and has a .710 slugging percentage. Minor is hitting .345 while starting in all of Oklahoma's games.

Ward said some of Minor's success might be attributed to the shift of media attention onto himself.

"He's worked hard in the off-season and has been playing great this season," Ward said. "Part of the fact might be that his brother is not on the team this year. Everybody is talking to him instead of his brother now."

Oklahoma's weakness might be its pitching.

"The one time that we played them we saw they had a quality offense, but their pitching staff is not as strong as it usually is," Ward said. "Our biggest deal this weekend will be to get them out. If we can get them out and take advantage of any pitching woes that they might have, we might be able to pick up some ballgames."

NU's Berringer dies in crash

Associated Press

RAYMOND, Neb. — Brook Berringer, the backup quarterback who helped Nebraska win the 1994 national title, was killed Thursday when the small plane he was piloting crashed in an alfalfa field.

Plane owner Harry Barr said the other person killed in the two-seater was Toby Lake, the brother of Berringer's girlfriend.

Berringer, 22, who was expected to be selected in the NFL draft this weekend, had a pilot's license and often flew the plane, Barr said. Berringer had often said he wanted to be a commercial airline pilot.

The 50-year-old plane struggled to a height of 250 feet before crashing on a farm near this east-central Nebraska village minutes after takeoff from a grass airstrip.

"We could tell it was going slow," said Jim Jeffers, who lives about a mile from the crash site 11 miles northwest of Lincoln. "After takeoff, when the wing dropped, I knew it was going to hit the ground."

Lancaster County Sheriff Terry Wagner said the bodies were removed from the crash site about 6:25 p.m. and were taken to a Lincoln hospital.

The sheriff said dental records would be used to officially identify the badly charred bodies.

Berringer had been scheduled to speak Thursday night at the Fellowship of Christian Athletes banquet at the Devaney Center in Lincoln, where players and fans hugged one another when they learned of the crash.

"Brook would want this event to go on as planned," Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said at the banquet.

"I know he would want it to be done in the spirit with which it was intended — to honor God. Brook honored God. Brook enjoyed life to the fullest."

Gov. Ben Nelson called Berringer a leader and role model who "touched our lives with his skill."

"The last time I saw Brook we talked about going hunting together," Nelson said. "Brook talked a lot about what Nebraska has done for him. I believe he gave more back to us."

The plane, which Barr has owned for about 15 years, crashed about one-eighth of a mile from the airstrip.

Wagner said he was told the plane took off, then began to Berringer hailed as hometown hero

Associated Press

GOODLAND — The unexpected death of Nebraska quarterback Brook Berringer has devastated fans and friends who knew him in his hometown.

"There is just total sadness and shock," said Marty Melia, a friend of the football player and owner of Goodland radio station KLOE. "This is probably the toughest thing that has ever happened to this community as a whole."

Melia said Berringer was hailed as a hometown hero when he spent last week in Goodland, in northwest Kansas. There were personal appearances, autograph sessions and a Friday benefit basketball game in which Berringer played with several of his teammates.

About 1,100 people attended the game at Goodland High School that raised about $4,800 for the Goodland Activities Center, said Randy McCants, publisher of the Goodland Daily News.

Melia said he had known Berringer most of his life.

"We watched him grow up and compete in high school," Melia said. "Just last Friday night they introduced him (at the game) and there was a standing ovation. The whole community was just so proud of him."

As a high school athlete, Berringer was somewhat overlooked at Goodland, said Ted Hayes, executive director of the Kansas Sports Hall of Fame in Abilene.

"He was a great athlete who did not have great numbers," Hayes said. "He was kind of

'Vertically challenged' ace readjusts his season goals

Chris May
contributing writer

When Matt Koeman steps onto the field, K-State is sending more than just a pitcher to the mound.

Koeman, senior right-hander from Grand Junction, Colo., started his career at Barton County Community College in Great Bend and after two years went to McNeese State in Louisiana on an academic scholarship. He didn't stay long.

"I went down there and didn't like it at all and stayed about a day and a half there," Koeman said. "It didn't take long."

Koeman was able to get out of his scholarship because it was academic and not an athletic one, which meant he could also play somewhere else without sitting out a season.

He returned to Kansas and asked the K-State coaching staff if he could walk on. It agreed, and Koeman began practice in fall 1994.

Last season Koeman was named first-team All-Big 8, had an earned run average of 4.96, was named Big 8 player of the week twice, received All-Big 8 Tournament honors and led the conference in strikeouts per inning.

So how does a pitcher improve from a season like that?

"I haven't improved a whole lot. I'm trying to find my form that I had," Koeman said.

"It's been tough pitching the amount of innings, because I'm not used to pitching as much as I am now. I've really had to adjust. My experience has helped me improve."

Assistant coach Rocky Ward said he sees only one difference in Koeman this season.

"The only thing that's changed has been our expectations," Ward said. "His stuff (itches) haven't changed — just his expectations and responsibilities."

Koeman is doing a good job of adjusting. He leads the 21-16 Cats with a 4.14 ERA. Tuesday night Koeman earned a win against the No. 22-ranked Missouri Tigers.

Although the season is half over, Koeman still has high goals for the team.

"I had to readjust some of my goals because right now we aren't doing as well," Koeman said. "My goals are to make All-Big 8 again, to help get the team into the Big 8 Tournament now and hopefully to win the Big 8 Tournament."

Koeman's desire to make the team the best it can be and to get it to the tournament rubs off on the team, Ward said.

"He's a likable guy, which is all based on how he reacts to pressure," Ward said. "He doesn't complain when things go bad. When guys were committing all the errors behind him, he told the guys to keep trying."

But, Koeman isn't all about baseball. He still has two years left in school as an architectural engineering major.

"Right now it looks like I might be playing minor league baseball this summer, but I'll continue to go to school in the fall and then play in the spring," Koeman said.

Minor league baseball is more of an individual sport, Koeman said, which means he will be able to continue to go to school in the offseason and work out on his own.

After graduation, Koeman said finding a job shouldn't be a problem.

"The job placement in architectural engineering is really good right now. I've heard 100 percent of graduating architectural engineers find a job," Koeman said.

So what about baseball?

"It's hard knowing, since I have two years left. It just depends. Once I get there, they move you up on their discretion, and they move you down and cut you whenever," Koeman said.

This coming from a guy who never really saw himself as a baseball player, but as more of a basketball player.

"I've played more basketball than baseball, and that was the sport I really enjoyed playing," Koeman said.

"I realized where my future was being 6-3 and vertically challenged."

Koeman said with his recent baseball success he's not going to wait around forever in the minor leagues. Just being able to say he did it will be enough for him.

Ward said Koeman has a shot at the majors.

"He'll get an opportunity. It just depends on how long he wants to stay in the minors," Ward said.

"It's a tough, non-glamorous life to live."

Koeman's thoughts were the same. "If I don't have a chance to play, then I'll leave. I'm not going to stick around for more than four years," Koeman said. "Just something to say I've done."

Matt Koeman senior right hander for the Wildcats, delivers a pitch during a recent game against Nebraska. Koeman, 5-3, leads the K-State pitching staff with a 4.14 ERA.

Jazz — Wichita style

Legendary artist with bluesy, mellow voice to perform at 25th-anniversary festival

by Russell Fortmeyer

Green may be the color of spring, but Kansas is getting a little blue.

Bluesy jazz legend Joe Williams headlines the Wichita Jazz Festival, which begins tooting and be-bopping in the air capital this Sunday.

Along with Williams, the Festival's 25th-anniversary line-up is a knock-out featuring Bassist Christian McBride, Charlie Haden/Quartet West and the North Texas State Lab Band in various concerts from April 21-28.

"Every major jazz artist has performed at the Wichita Jazz Festival in the last 25 years," said Dee Starkey, operations director of the festival.

It's true, too. Such greats as Pat Metheny, Sarah Vaughn, Ray Charles, Mel Torme, Al Grey, Wynton Marsalis, Chick Corea and Stan Getz have graced the center stage of the festival over the years.

Trumpet-great Clark Terry, who performed last fall in McCain Auditorium, played the festival the first seven years in a row.

The festival began in 1971 through the dedication of Wichita jazz enthusiasts. The first festival featured Gene Harris, Jay McShann, Cannonball Adderley, Lou Marini, Jr., Clark Terry, Pat Metheny and Nat Adderley.

The mission of the festival was, and still is, to promote jazz education to students of every age, bring internationally-known jazz artists to Wichita and help preserve this uniquely American art form.

Joe Williams, who headlines the main concert on April 28, last performed at the festival in 1978.

Williams' bluesy, mellow voice has entertained audiences for more than 50 years.

He's probably best known for his seven-year stint with the Count Basie Orchestra, in addition to more than 45 albums with a jaw-dropping array of jazz musicians. Williams gained international recognition with his hit song "Everyday I Have the Blues."

Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies at K-State, said Joe Williams is the consummate big band singer.

Joe Williams

"He is the singer of the Count Basie Orchestra," Wilson said. "He became a star just being with Basie."

"I remember what Basie once said about Williams, 'I'm never going to make a star out of another singer,'" Wilson said. "I'd love to bring Joe here to the K-State Jazz Festival with the Basie Band."

The K-State Jazz Ensemble will not be performing at the festival. Wilson said he'd like to take his band to the festival, but there wasn't enough money.

"It's a good festival," Wilson said. "I've played there once with the Count Basie Orchestra."

Williams will be appearing with pianist Norm Simmons and the Wichita Jazz Orchestra.

Opening for Williams will be the Wichita Jazz Orchestra, the North Texas State Lab Band, the Latin-spiced piano of the Monty Alexander Trio and the eclectic, Grammy-nominated Charlie Haden/Quartet West.

Bassist Christian McBride headlines the April 27 concert with his quartet. Only 23 years old, McBride is probably the hottest bassist in the country.

McBride has more than 70 album credits to his name, including recordings with Joshua Redman, Pat Metheny, Betty Carter and Wynton Marsalis.

Starkey said tickets are still available for all shows and can usually be purchased at the door — barring a sellout. Admission varies. (See schedule for more information.)

As part of the mission of the festival, educational outreach is still a big player in the week's events.

Tom Fowler, educational director of Wichita Jazz Festival Inc., said the artists-in-residence of the festival will be performing music workshops at Wichita-area schools during the course of the week.

The resident artists include Jerry Hahn, guitarist; Andrew Bishop, saxophonist; Matt Wilson, drums, and Dwight Killian, bass. Hahn taught guitar at Wichita State University, and the others are alumni of the music program.

Fowler, also director of jazz ensembles and professor of music education at Wichita State University, said Wichita State has been involved with the festival since 1970, when the university was host to a jazz music competition for high school and university bands.

"This year," Fowler said, "we will have 50

college and high school bands performing in the festival."

On April 26, bands from universities, high schools and middle schools throughout the country will perform non-stop in concert from 9 a.m. to midnight at WSU.

Fowler said this is a popular event and can easily sell out.

Fowler, who plays alto saxophone, flute and clarinet, will perform with the Wichita Jazz Orchestra with Joe Williams at Sunday's concert.

The Orchestra plays off and on all year round and has performed at the festival with Mel Torme and the Manhattan Transfer, Fowler said.

The highlight for Wichita-area high school bands will be the "Jazz in the Round" concert on April 23 at Northwest High School, 220 N. Tyler.

Brian Hoffman, director of bands at Northwest High School, said the "Jazz in the Round" is a district-sponsored event that brings together seven Wichita high school jazz bands.

"We host it here in our commons," Hoffman said. "All of the high schools in the district perform in this event."

Hoffman said the concert is structured for the bands to set up in a circle around the audience, allowing each band to play a couple of songs. The audience turns its chair for each mini-concert.

"We get a good response with jazz enthusiasts — and parents and friends from seven schools."

ageless MEMORY

Local residents recollect deadly day; disaster still causes memories, pain

by heather hollingsworth

AT 9:02 A.M., AN EXPLOSION OUTSIDE THE ALFRED P. MURRAH FEDERAL BUILDING IN OKLAHOMA CITY KILLED 168 AND INJURED MORE THAN 500. AS NEWS MADE ITS WAY TO MANHATTAN, PARENTS, STUDENTS AND FACULTY WAITED BY PHONES TO FIND OUT IF LOVED ONES SURVIVED THE BOMBING.

frank MURRAY

Taking a semester away from school, Frank Murray, sophomore in sociology, was doing laundry about a block away from the federal building when the bomb exploded.

The shock waves threw Murray about 3 feet. Luck was on his side, and he survived the explosion with minor cuts.

"It was so loud, I thought the washer and dryer had exploded," he said.

Murray's friend was not as lucky. He was opening a glass door when the bomb exploded and was thrown almost 20 feet before a wall stopped his flight. His friend survived the explosion with broken ribs and cuts from shards of glass.

"It could have been a lot worse," he said.

The windows shattered, and smoke poured from the federal building.

"It was a scary time," he said. "No one knew what had happened."

Murray helped a group of three people with minor injuries to the hospital.

In the chaos following the explosion, a second bomb was found, which he learned would have been large enough to clear the whole Oklahoma area.

"There were sirens going off, and people were running around," he said.

Murray said he ran between one and two miles when he heard of the second bomb. As he ran from the bomb site, he witnessed the rescue workers trying to get people out of the buildings before they collapsed. The dead lay in piles as the workers searched for survivors.

"I wasn't in that area very long. I didn't need to see that. People were having seizures," he said. "I saw people bleeding. It was gross."

It was not until 6 or 7 p.m. that evening before Murray's parents and sister learned he was safe.

"My family couldn't get in because martial law was in effect," he said.

Murray said it took three days for the severity of the disaster to hit him.

As the year anniversary of the disaster rolls around, Murray said the event has added meaning.

"It really woke me up in life and made me enjoy life more."

"I look at it as having a second chance. I saw a lot of people that didn't make it," he said. "I'm living on a second wind."

But thoughts of the wounded and dead, particularly the children, still haunt him.

"Probably when I think of that — the little kids — the innocence. There was no need. I don't even know what the guy's goal was."

candace BUTLER

Around noon Candace Butler, graduate student in English, learned of the explosion.

Her father worked in the Southwestern Bell building located about a block away from the bomb. At the time of the explosion, he was in a meeting across the street from the federal building.

It was almost seven hours before Butler learned her father had survived the bombing.

"It took a good three hours to comprehend what had happened," she said.

During the long wait, Butler was glued to her TV set.

Butler's father, who fought in Vietnam, said when he heard the explosion, "It felt like a plane had crashed into his building," Butler said.

Debris began falling on the room's occupants. As they made their way outside, the air was filled with smoke.

"He said it was worse than anything he had seen in Vietnam," she said.

Although her father survived the explosion, her cousin's son was not as lucky.

The 2-year-old boy was one of the last children to be pulled from the rubble.

Butler is a resident of Anadarko, Okla., which is about a 30-minute drive from Oklahoma City. She returned to her hometown over summer and semester vacation and discovered the memories of the explosion were still fresh on peoples' minds.

During semester break, her family drove through the area. The building had been torn down, but memories of the crash were everywhere. Mourners put presents by a Christmas tree and letters on a fence surrounding the federal building.

"It was all you would ever hear about," she said.

The constant news sometimes became overwhelming.

"I didn't want to deal with it anymore," Butler said.

omer TITTLE

"I think it was a special news bulletin caught our attention," said Omer Tittle, senior pastor at the First United Methodist Church in Manhattan.

Tittle went to high school about a block away from the bombing site.

Central High School, his alma mater, is now the Southwestern Bell building where Butler's father works.

"I knew the area like the back of my hand," Tittle said. "My mother and sister lived about a mile away."

As the bomb ripped the federal building apart, Tittle's mom and sister were pulling out of their driveway.

About two weeks following the bombing Tittle and his wife,

Local elementary school remembers deadly Oklahoma City explosion

by gina garvin

IT HAPPENED ONE YEAR AGO, AND RESPONSES ARE JUST AS FRESH AS IF IT WERE YESTERDAY.

April 19, 1995 — the day Oklahoma City was shattered by the bombing of the federal building was just another day for most students at Bluemont Elementary School.

Many of the students didn't find out what had happened in Oklahoma until they got home after school and watched the news with their parents, but some of the students did find out at school.

"I was delivering a paper to the basement where the teacher's lounge is, and I heard over the radio that the federal building had been bombed," Deidre Thorburn, sixth-grader, said.

The students and teachers had a mixture of emotions, including fear, disbelief and anger.

"I felt disbelief. How could someone do that?" said Louella Ziemann, adviser to the computer lab and school newspaper.

Many of the students were also scared after hearing about the bombing and children who were injured. "I was scared. What if there were other people with bombs?" Emily Fenwick, fifth-grader, said.

The variety of emotions prompted students and teachers at Bluemont to lend a helping hand to the victims, family members and volunteers in Oklahoma.

The kids decided to make a large blanket, placing 400 of their hand prints, names, and a message to the victims of Oklahoma City. The blanket was then sent to a fire station in Oklahoma that helped volunteer.

The Busy Bobcat, the school newspaper, sponsored a bake sale at which $200 was donated and sent through the Red Cross to help with expenses of the victims. The response to the bake sale was overwhelming by all the students.

Jazz ensembles to perform at spring concert

Brent Smitko
staff reporter

The K-State University Jazz Ensembles will be performing their annual spring concert at 6 p.m. in Forum Hall this Sunday. Six jazz ensembles are scheduled to play, including KSU Flute Juice, the Jazz Trombone Choir, Jazz Lab Bands A and B and the Jazz Combo, said Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies at K-State.

Among the wide range of jazz music being performed on Sunday, seven of the charts were arranged and composed by Wilson. Valerie Henderson, a sophomore in music education and a member of Flute Juice, said jazz is something everyone should experience and the concert is free. "Sunday would be a great time to do so," Henderson said. "It's different and fun." Last year Wilson introduced Flute Juice, and with the concert on Sunday, he now plans to build the group up even more, he said. "This concert establishes them forever," Wilson said. "They've become quite a thing already." The Jazz Trombone Choir is playing the new group this year, which Wilson is extremely proud of.

"We're going to shock some people," he said. There will also be a first time performance from Danielle Hett, a jazz vocalist and sophomore in applied music. "This will give her something to build from," he said. Wilson said he is hoping that Hett's performance will lead to the start of a jazz vocal choir at K-State.

The Concert Jazz Ensemble that is thought of as the top jazz group at K-State won't be performing. But it will be naming its outstanding musician award during the concert. "It goes to the person who goes above and beyond the call of duty," Wilson said. "This will be a very musical concert," he said.

Trio to blend sound, style in McCain performance

Abbi Hake
staff writer

It's not the ordinary garden variety. That is what Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said about this Sunday's trio in McCain.

The performance will bring an unusual combination of voice and instrument and a sense of locality.

The trio, featuring Marion native Beverly Hoch, soprano; Todd Palmer, clarinet, and Charles Wadsworth, pianist, has planned an afternoon of music that will unite opposing musical styles.

The group will perform in different configurations and will feature works by impressionist Claude Debussy as well as neoclassic pieces by Francis Poulenc. These two different sounds will be placed together in the performance, creating a juxtaposition of the light, wispy sounds of the impressionists and the clearer melody of the neoclassicists.

Hoch, world-renowned for her stratospheric voice, resides in New York City and has performed at Carnegie Hall and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, among others.

The experience of Palmer and Wadsworth are just as extensive. Palmer has appeared in orchestras, recitals and festivals throughout the United States and in Mexico, Japan, France and Italy.

Wadsworth is the founder of the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center and the artistic director of this summer's Olympic Celebration of Chamber Music.

Martin said among the 14 works are several foreign language pieces that will be translated for the audience in the program.

"It's an opportunity for people in the town to hear some outstanding artists," Martin said.

The trio will perform at 3 p.m. Tickets are $16 for the public, $14 for senior citizens and $8 for students and children, and they are available at McCain box office.

Carey Foster, a friend of Buckner's and a resident of Oklahoma City, said the sign moved him.

"I was standing right here reading all that stuff. I could feel the pain. I can hear the cries," he said, emphasizing each word with the thrust of a hand and a deep facial expression.

Buckner said he didn't hear any cries.

But people in the crowd around him were crying — a year after the bombing.

Tears ran down Dora Reyes' face. Her daughter lives safely in Kansas, but her husband died in the bombing. Memories are still vivid.

Reyes won't make it to the site Friday morning for the scheduled city memorial service, so she decided to visit Wednesday, despite the crowds and media.

One hundred yards in front of her, a TV reporter held a large, yellow microphone and intently interviewed a gray-suited man.

Behind her the fence had flowers, poster memorials, teddy bears and children's blankets.

Hundreds of miles away from her, people everywhere are still asking what kind of person would kill the 168 people, including 19 children, and why such a tragedy happened in America's heartland.

At the Dreamland Motel in Junction City, owner Lea McGown remembers talking to the young, energetic and outgoing Timothy McVeigh when he stayed there days before the bombing.

"He was just like anybody," she said.

A year ago, McGown positively identified McVeigh for the FBI. Today, she is tired of talking about the charged killer.

"Something horrible happened, but let's turn it into something where everyone else will learn from it," she said.

America has a court system, she said in a thick German accent, and the court system will take care of it.

McGown is an American citizen and a little embarrassed of her accent.

She said she is also embarrassed of how the U.S. media has exploited her hotel and Junction City.

Across town, Steve Selock is also tired of talking about the bombing.

"It's been a year now," he emphasized.

The people of Junction City are very aware of how their city has been used and torn to pieces by the media, he said.

They are tired of talking about it.

The people Selock knows are tired of talking about the bombing and its suspects. They aren't even interested in the possibility of more evidence or suspects existing.

In Oklahoma, site mourners and visitors are uneasy about possible uncovered evidence.

When a city employee began to uncover earth just inside the site's wire fence, some onlookers shifted nervously.

They became engrossed in watching him first stab the red dirt and then kneel to dig with his hands.

Their silence grew thicker. Anxious faces questioned what this man might uncover. A remaining glass shard? A random concrete chunk? A victim's personal item?

No. Everyone knew the earth had been plowed and planted with fresh grass, and any remains of the bombing are long since confiscated.

Nobody was surprised when the city employee pulled up a simple, black water sprinkler. City officials have said the site will be turned into a park.

But the crowd's faces still asked what more could be unearthed.

Questions loom in the silence.

Students at Bluemont also planted a red bud tree that was donated by Kansas Power and Light to help honor the victims of Oklahoma City.

Today, the memories of what happened a year ago are still fresh at Bluemont.

Students will take part in an anniversary ceremony that will place a plaque on the budding tree that was planted one year ago.

The plaque was donated by KPL and will read, "Love will triumph over adversity," in honor of the children.

Students will also wear teddy bear buttons to honor the victims.

The Busy Bobcat is running special stories written by Bluemont students that will reflect on the tragedy in Oklahoma.

Bluemont kids aren't likely to forget the Oklahoma City bombing, as they reflected on the emotions they are feeling one year later.

"It's sad to hear about people who do that kind of stuff. They don't think about the people they're going to hurt," Dusty Moore, sixth-grader, said.

"They don't think how much others will despise them," Moore said.

Students will continue to think about Oklahoma City, because it's still in the news and others are still talking about the tragedy.

"Time heals, but it doesn't stop the anger or fear," Zieman said.

TRAGEDY

Koleta, visited Oklahoma City with their 9-year-old grandson.

A fence surrounds the place where the federal building once stood, and mourners placed cards, poetry and stuffed animals on the fence.

"I read the poetry found on the fence, but I was so distraught I couldn't finish," Tittle said.

His grandson took over. "There was no joy in his speech,"

Tittle said. "His decorum was one of silence."

The poem he remembers most vividly tells of the heartbreak the community and nation feels for the many children who died in the explosion.

One of the most eerie aspects of the visit was the U-Haul trucks removing belongings from the buildings, Tittle said.

But religious convictions helped Tittle come to terms with the disaster.

"We need to be loving of one another instead of harming one another," Tittle said.

"Maternal death is the top reason for death in India," Tikoo said. This shows that women are not being taken care of, she said.

Tikoo talked about domestic violence in India.

"Traditionally, a woman is treated as a property," Tikoo said.

First the father owns the woman, then the husband and then maybe the eldest son if the husband dies, she said.

Rural communities in India can deal with domestic violence.

"In a rural community, I can step in and stop the violence, unlike in the big cities," Tikoo said.

Daisy Kabagarama, Uganda, said that traditionally the African woman is powerful.

"The mother is given a special place in the community she is present in," Kabagarama said.

Usually females are told to stay at home and learn how to become good wives while males get educated in schools, Kabagarama said.

"Education is the equalizer," Kabagarama said. Without education, women have no means to survive in a modern society, she said.

Once you are educated, you are recognized, Kabagarama said.

Educated women have a hard time finding mates, she said.

Men worry that they cannot be in charge, and their role will be diminished as the family head.

"African women are increasingly gaining a voice in economic and social issues," Kabagarama said.

All of the speakers agreed that a lot of work needs to be done in order for women to equal men in all aspects of life.

shake. He said the left wing dropped as the plane attempted to turn around, and strong winds slammed the plane into the ground, where it burst into flames.

The National Weather Service said northwesterly winds were gusting to about 30 mph on the ground.

Wagner said the pilot did not issue a distress call before the 2:30 p.m. crash.

Berringer was not required to file a flight plan, and air traffic controllers weren't following the flight. Small, private aircraft do not have to file flight plans.

Berringer was 7-0 as a starter during the 1994 season when Tommie Frazier was sidelined with blood clots in his leg.

Berringer and Frazier both played in the Orange Bowl against Miami, but it was Frazier who led the Cornhuskers to a 24-17 comeback victory in the fourth quarter.

Berringer, of Goodland, played sparingly behind Frazier last season when Nebraska won its second-straight national title with a 62-24 rout of Florida in the Fiesta Bowl.

He was to have graduated in December with a major in business administration.

Barr said Berringer had been flying for about three years, had flown between 100-150 hours and flew the plane about twice a month.

"It was just a little airplane that he would fly around locally in," Barr said. "He would never get more than three or four miles from the airstrip."

The plane, a 1946 Piper J-3 Cub with a 36-foot wingspan, was flown at least once this week, said Jack Christensen, a co-owner of the airstrip.

Assistant Raymond Fire Chief Harold Danly said the plane was in flames and the passengers were dead when firefighters arrived about 3 p.m.

"It's just a pile of iron," said George Johnson, the man who owns the field where the plane crashed.

a factor, because once the meeting was adjourned, the committee would no longer exist for this session, and the bill would effectively die.

After further questions and debate, Gip Githens, education senator, moved for a 10-minute recess so the Allocations Committee could get together and straighten out the bill.

Chris Avila, allocations chair, reported the committee was split in its decision to support the bill. It was the determination of the committee to remove the sponsor of the bill as the Allocations Committee and changed the sponsors to the five members in support of the bill.

The funding bill did not pass even after the technicalities were hammered out.

Additional bills up for second readings included approving the College of Architecture, Planning and Design constitutional revisions and a by-law revision regarding Holton Hall advisory board membership.

Two bills were passed concerning Jardine Terrace Apartments. One will incorporate Jardine into the Housing and Dining Services judicial board system, and the other changes the title of hall directors to residence life coordinator/assistant residence life coordinator.

Many commendations were made for members of student government who will be leaving their positions after this year.

One was for Lisa Heath, interim graduate assistant coordinator, who will be returning to Fort Hays State University after this year. A second commendation was for John Potter and Trent LeDoux for serving as Student Senate chair and vice-chair, respectively. A final commendation recognized Becca Korphage for the time and effort put forth as attorney general.

Before the general Senate meeting began, the annual SGA banquet was from 5 to 7 p.m. overlooked by the Kansas media. A lot of people weren't aware of him because of Goodland's location.

He did not get a lot of attention in the major newspapers, and his team didn't go far in the playoffs.

Hayes was a member of the Shrine Bowl selection committee that chose the players for the Kansas high school all-star game in Berringer's senior year.

"We looked at the numbers, and he didn't have outstanding statistics," Hayes said.

"We thought maybe he wasn't as good as some other quarterbacks, then found out he was being recruited by Nebraska.

"He was certainly well received by Nebraska.

"He has a tremendous reputation among people in western Kansas, and he is an outstanding young man from every report I have heard," Hayes said.

Berringer's former high school coach could not be reached Thursday night for comment.

Melia said the entire town and surrounding area are "just devastated."

"There was nothing bad about him," Melia said. "He was kind and pure and honest...He just really stands out."

"That is what makes it all the worse," Melia said.

As Vanderbilt's recruiting coordinator, Patterson helped the Commodores land eight all-Americans.

"I think she'll be a terrific head coach," Vanderbilt coach Jim Foster said. "She's ready for the job. She'll be the fifth former assistant I've had that is now a head coach, and she's got the qualities the others had."

"She's a great communicator, an excellent recruiter — as good as there is — and a terrific teacher. She's got it all."

Patterson came to Vanderbilt from Southern Illinois, where she spent the 1991-92 season as an assistant coach. After Patterson retooled SIU's offense, the Salukis went 20-5, falling in the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

She spent the previous four years as an assistant at Northern Illinois, where she recruited two high school all-Americans and helped NIU to the second round of the NCAA Tournament in 1990.

"We're looking forward to a really positive change, and we're looking to build success," Decker said. "She talked about looking toward the NCAA tournament, and that's a goal we can really reach for and respond to."

Patterson's coaching career began at Rockton (Ill.) Hononegah High School, where she turned an 0-22 embarrassment into a 21-2 power in just four years.

ASSAULT

The victim told investigators the suspect covered her face during the assault and told her not to move or yell until he fled the scene, Schmitt said.

Pottawatomie County investigators questioned a suspect in Salina after receiving a license plate number from a K-State geology professor who saw a suspicious car flee the area near the time of the assault.

James R. Underwood Jr., professor of geology, said he was with his Structural Geology laboratory class working on the spillway channel when a gray Honda Accord sped past his class, driving recklessly.

"The thought occurred to me that he was perhaps vandalizing the signs that mark the fault," he said.

"I didn't think a thing more about it until we went around and the signs were still there."

Schmitt said the suspect owned a gray Honda Accord.

The suspect, a Salina resident with close ties to the Manhattan area and K-State, accompanied police to the Salina Police Department, where he was interviewed and released, Schmitt said. The suspect has not been charged with the sexual assaults.

Hair, blood and clothing samples were taken as forensic evidence and were sent to the Kansas Bureau of Investigation for analyzing.

Cigarette sales resume in Union

Sara Edwards
staff writer

After eight years, cigarettes are again for sale at the K-State Student Union. The information counter started selling cigarettes at the end of last week.

Marlboro varieties, Kool Menthols, Winston and Camel Lights 100 cigarette packs are available for $1.95, and Doral and GPC packs are available for $1.45.

Pat Carney, Union Governing Board president, said the Union was able to put cigarettes on sale after it received licensing from the state and information from cigarette companies.

Carney said he put the new policy together that authorizes the Union director's office to sell

■ License permits sale of tobacco after 8-year absence tobacco at the information counter and other areas in the Union like a convenience store planned for the Union after it is renovated.

In 1988, the board instated a policy that no tobacco products could be used or sold in the Union, Carney said.

He said that at the time, the board thought it would be hypocritical to sell tobacco products and not let people use them in the Union.

He said he wanted to allow sales in the Union without allowing people to smoke because of the retail factor.

Like the decision to sell beer in the Union two years ago, this decision was mostly financial based.

"It enhances the profit revenue, diversifies products and gives people another reason to come into the Union," Carney said.

He said in the past, tobacco products sales made a profit of $15,000-$20,000 a year.

He said he expects profits to be at that level.

Eric Rice, junior in human resource management, works at the information counter and has been observing sales so far.

"It looks steady enough that it will be around for a while," Rice said.

Senate votes in candidates who don't have violations

Courtney Marshall
staff writer

Student senators voted to approve candidates who did not have any campaign violations into offices Thursday night.

Campaign violations were made when a candidate missed the filing deadline, failed to go to one of the two mandatory meetings, or did not turn in an expenditure report.

Senators had the choice of approving the Student Governing Association's election results, which included those without campaign violations or approving the candidates with the most votes, regardless of violations.

Some campaign violators addressed Senate during open period and said why they did not follow campaign guidelines.

Julie Peeke, junior in business, served on the Business Council last year and was up for re-election.

"I didn't turn in an expenditure report because I didn't spend any money," Peeke said.

She also made the point this is the first year the elections have been run by the Elections Committee rather than the individual colleges.

Others addressed Student Senate with similar concerns. Brian Riedel, sophomore in engineering, and Brad Montgomery, freshman in agricultural economics, said they also did not turn in

Suspect to enter plea in death of K-State alumna

Sara Edwards
staff writer

A man charged in killing K-State alumna Voua Lo Kiatoukaysi was apprehended in Tijuana, Mexico, after a month-long search. He now sits in a Wisconsin jail detained with a $1 million bond.

Da Vang was charged for the double homicide of his ex-wife, Jia Yang, and Kiatoukaysi. He is suspected of shooting both women in front of Yang's four children on Jan. 28.

Vang will enter a plea to the Marathon County Courthouse May 12. Relatives of the victims expect him to stand trial for first-degree murder.

Vang eluded police until Feb. 29, when he was found in Tijuana. Lieutenant Dale Tessmer of the Wasau police department said he was found when Mexican authorities did a check on the vehicle he was driving and found the license plates were stolen.

Tessmer said he and another officer met with an FBI liaison in San Diego. It took three days of negotiation with Mexican authorities to bring Vang back to the United States.

Tessmer said federal marshals took Vang to Wisconsin, and he and Lt. Charlie Jones drove the car back. They returned March 14.

Lo Xao Kiatoukaysi, Voua Lo's brother, who attended the preliminary hearings, said that during the trial information came out that Vang was able to escape police for such a long time because he took small roads and he had people that helped him along the way. He said Vang also had a fake driver's license and Social Security number.

"Somehow he slipped through," Tessmer said. On April 12, preliminary hearings in which police introduced evidence and minimum information were held for Vang.

"The judge said, yes, there is sufficient evidence for a jury trial," Kiatoukaysi said.

Kiatoukaysi said Vang refused to talk at the hearing. Instead, information about the crime was revealed through Vang's personal diary, where he described whom he shot first and how they fell. He also made tape recordings about the killings.

► NATIONAL RECOGNITION

K-State receives Truman honor

Riches Licklider
staff reporter

K-State has been chosen as one of 17 inaugural Truman Honor Institutions by the Truman Scholarship Foundation.

"We are pleased that the Truman Foundation chose K-State as one of 17 honor institutions out of all the schools that have had Truman winners. This is a tremendous recognition. This is the first time the Truman Foundation has recognized colleges and universities for excellence in Truman competition," President Jon Wefald said.

Of the 17 institutions awarded, included were 11 universities, four colleges, one service academy and one community college.

Among those were such institutions as Harvard, Yale, Arizona State, Duke, the University of North Carolina and others.

"K-State has had more Truman Scholars than any other public institution in the country since the scholarship program began," said Nancy Twiss, special assistant to the provost for scholarships.

K-State currently has one Truman Scholar, Shante Moore, senior in political science and Latin American studies, Twiss said.

Native American dancers make their way around a drum during Saturday's seventh annual powwow in Ahearn Field House.

Sounds of powwow fill Ahearn

Mikki Tice
staff reporter

Drums hammered out a chant while people in colorful outfits danced past the audience. Saturday, Native Americans presented the Seventh Annual Powwow to the community of Manhattan by honoring each other with special dances.

Sounds of drums and chanting came from Ahearn Field House. On the inside there were dancing, colorful outfits and a large drum being played by eight men who chanted. All around the arena people sold beads, jewelry, clothing and blankets.

The audience saw many dances, each with its own outfits and significance. One of the dances the audience saw was goure dancing.

"Goure dancing is a war dance honoring veterans who succeeded largely in life through military and education," Ray Kingfish, Northern Cheyenne from Montana, said.

He said this dance, which was performed in ceremonial dancing, originated from Oklahoma. It later became formatted for powwows.

The majority of the men wore orange and blue sashes with decorations on them and one man had a veteran's medal attached to his sash. The women stood around the drum or edge of the arena dancing.

Pete Hoeman, alumnus in anthropology and English, said he has been attending the powwow for three years.

"The most striking aspect of the powwow is the informality of it. They don't worry about time and are laid back yet still very serious," Hoeman said.

"I have noticed that some dancers really get into the music and others barely move their feet. The dancers that do get into the music have exaggerated movements, and it's fun to watch."

After the goure dancing was completed, the head male dancer, Pete Buffalohead, requested to do an exhibition dance. He started with his family dancing clockwise around the drum. Members of different tribes came out and shook his hand and then put money in a hat to honor the head man dancer.

"The exhibition dance acknowledged him in another style of dancing called the Northern Traditional," Travis Blackbird, sophomore in social work, said.

"Overall, the powwow went well," Blackbird said. "The dancers were exceptional, but the crowd was less than expected."

► UPCOMING ELECTION NOT A SUMMIT ISSUE WITH CLINTON, YELTSIN

MOSCOW (AP) — With hugs and handshakes, President Clinton and Boris Yeltsin traded warm compliments and played down nagging differences Sunday, insisting that their election-year summit was not influenced by presidential politics.

Both leaders facing re-election battles, Clinton and Yeltsin would not even entertain the possibility of a Communist comeback in Russia. "I am sure that I will be victorious," Yeltsin boomed at a Kremlin news conference with Clinton.

"That makes my answer irrelevant, doesn't it," Clinton said with a smile.

With Yeltsin under fire for the bloody fighting in the breakaway republic of Chechnya, Clinton expressed sympathy with Russia's position and compared the situation with America's Civil War.

Clinton said Abraham Lincoln gave his life for the proposition "that no state had a right to withdraw from our union. And so, the United States has taken the position that Chechnya is a part of Russia."

As to whether the summit would help politically, Clinton said, "It's a great mistake to put too much of a political spin on this since typically foreign policy does not play that big a role in voting patterns."

After five hours of talks, Clinton and Yeltsin reported progress in resolving a dispute over the deployment of Russian troops under a 30-nation treaty on conventional forces in Europe.

They also said they set the stage to clear up Russia's objections to development of American theater missile defenses under the 1972 Antiballistic Missile Treaty. Formal negotiations resume in Geneva in June.

► PERES CALLS FOR U.S. HELP

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres criticized Sunday the mushrooming number of would-be Middle East peacemakers and said only the United States was capable of working out a cease-fire in southern Lebanon.

"It cannot be done from many channels," Peres said as American, Russian and European diplomats crisscrossed the region pursuing their own proposals to end the fighting between Israel and Shiite Hezbollah extremists.

Clearly preferring American mediation over the others, Peres said, "If there will be more than one channel, there will be total confusion."

The Israeli leader, the target of rising world criticism for the Israeli bombardment of southern Lebanon — but supported unwaveringly by the Clinton administration — met twice with Secretary of State Warren Christopher.

► DOLE WAVERS ON ABORTION

WASHINGTON (AP) — It is just 98 words, one paragraph on page 24 of the official Republican Platform, unequivocal from the outset: "We believe the unborn child has a fundamental individual right to live which cannot be infringed."

At times, Bob Dole wants to rewrite this paragraph, as do some top political advisers, and even some prominent anti-abortion leaders. But is messing with the Republican Party's anti-abortion plank worth the potential bloodbath?

Dole must deal with that question as he looks ahead to accepting the GOP presidential nomination. Indeed, abortion is the issue being handled most gingerly as the Dole campaign considers potential platform changes.

Dole wants to shape the platform in his own image. In the case of abortion, new language could underscore independence from primary rival Pat Buchanan warning Dole not to tinker with the plank.

► PHONE COMPANIES TO MERGE

NEW YORK (AP) — Bell Atlantic Corp. and Nynex Corp. have agreed to merge in a deal that will create the nation's second-largest phone company with customers from Maine to Virginia, sources said.

Nynex's board approved the deal Sunday, following the Bell Atlantic board's approval Saturday, said sources familiar with the deal who spoke on condition of anonymity. Spokesmen for both companies declined comment.

The merger would put the two companies in a position to confront increasing competition and enter new businesses from a bigger customer base. It could also be the second-biggest merger in U.S. history. Nynex's stock now is worth about $22.7 billion.

Terms of the deal were not immediately available. An announcement was expected either late Sunday or Monday.

The merger comes just three weeks after the first-ever combination of regional Baby Bell companies and follows by two months a sweeping deregulation of the telecommunications industry.

► GOP EXAMINES BUDGET PLANS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans girding for an election-year budget battle hope to heal wounds they suffered last year and bloody President Clinton. But right now, they're not precisely sure how to do it.

House and Senate leaders agree that the fiscal 1997 budget Republicans will start writing later this month will look broadly similar to the GOP package Clinton vetoed in December. It will call for lower taxes and claim balance in 2002, relying chiefly on savings from Medicare, Medicaid, welfare and a host of domestic programs.

Republicans will be able to propose some smaller reductions than they did a year ago, which they hope will undo some of the political damage Clinton inflicted on them by accusing them of recklessly slashing crucial programs.

Self-defense workshop encourages awareness

Portia Sisco
staff writer

K-State women learned the basic elements of self-defense at a seminar Sunday at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Terrell Bix, instructor at Yu's Academy of Martial Arts, taught K-State students easy ways to defend themselves in threatening situations.

"You're not the victim. The victim mentality makes you easier prey," Bix said.

Victims can be picked out easily on the street because of the way they act. One should always walk in an assertive manner and look at a watch frequently. It gives the potential attacker the idea someone is waiting for them somewhere, Bix said.

Bix teaches a mindset along with self-defense activities. Students are taught that it is not wrong to defend themselves.

"You haven't created this situation. They chose you," Bix said.

A good self-image is an important part of self-defense.

"It's a change in mindset. I didn't ask for this, it was your mistake," Bix said.

There are several steps to self-defense. Awareness is the first, Bix said.

"Talk your way out of it. Physical confrontation is a last resort. Assess the situation the minute it happens. Their intent doesn't matter. You've already assessed the situation," Bix said.

Simple defense mechanisms like eye gouges and kicks were demonstrated by Bix and other black belts from the academy.

"With eyeballs, you can put them back in. If I'm going to be hurt, raped or hospitalized, his eyes are worth it," Bix said.

Greek Games raise money for American Lung Association

Jill Story
staff reporter

Delta Sigma Phi fraternity captured first place in the Greek Games Saturday, but the American Lung Association was the real winner.

"This philanthropy has worked out really well for us. We are their largest fundraiser in Kansas," said Kristy Ackerman, senior in marketing and one of the Greek Games co-chairpersons.

The event has taken place annually for more than 10 years. The total amount of money raised this weekend is unknown.

The weather cooperated nicely as 18 fraternities competed for a good cause in the egg toss, tug-of-war and obstacle course, among other events.

David Bealby, junior in history and pre-law, represented Delta Upsilon in the obstacle course.

The crowd erupted into cheers and laughter as Bealby took a flying leap, diving through a wading pool of muddy water. He then ran to a nearby Alpha Xi Delta sorority member who handed over a piece of sour bubble gum and told him to blow a bubble.

He also had to sit on a balloon to pop it and find a cherry in a whipped cream pie, before tagging his teammate, T.J. Trout, freshman in food science. Trout then ran with a crutch back to the wading pool and dived through before scrambling across the finish line.

"The strategy was to systematically destroy our opponents," Bealby said after the race, ducking under a water pump to rinse off some of the dirt.

"And to try and get mud on the judges," Trout said, laughing.

Ackerman said the obstacle course, volleyball and tug-of-war were the most popular Saturday events.

Friday night, the fraternity members competed in a lip-sync contest at Bombers.

"They got pretty creative. Some of the guys were dressed up like girls.

One group did a song from 'Annie,'" Ackerman said.

It was Alpha Xi housemother Pauline Houtz's first time to participate in the Greek Games festivities. She served as a judge for the lip-sync contest.

"They were so excited and had such a good time. You just wanted to give them all credit," she said.

Delta Tau Delta fraternity finished first in the lip-sync competition.

All participants in the competition had help from Alpha Xi members, who were paired up with each fraternity. The women spent the week before the contest rehearsing with the fraternity members and helping with the dance routines.

Laura Henrichs, sophomore in nutrition exercise science, was a coach for the DU team.

"We got third place. They used a mix of songs with Michael Jackson and Vanilla Ice and some others," Henrichs said.

Other Greek Games events included a three-on-three basketball tournament, in which Acacia fraternity claimed first place, and a Mr. Lungs donation contest, which the Delta Sigs won.

Delta Chi finished second, and DU finished third in the overall competition.

Bravo, Senate, for upholding election rules

QUICKread

► Student Senate voted to approve only those candidates who had no campaign violations. Congratulations for doing the right thing.

Student Senate added a bite to its bark Thursday when it decided to approve only the candidates for elected offices who had no campaign violations.

Senate has protected its constituency by making sure only candidates who are serious about doing their jobs are allowed to serve. If prospective senators cannot be bothered to follow the proper procedure to get the job, what kind of job will they do once in office?

Senate punished the candidates for not meeting filing deadlines, failing to attend one of the two mandatory meetings and not submitting expenditure reports.

If candidates wanted to truly serve the interests of the student body, they should certainly be expected to be aware of the filing deadlines.

During the mandatory meetings, candidates are instructed how to run their campaigns in order to avoid violations. If candidates cannot be relied upon to run smooth campaigns, they cannot be trusted to excel as senators.

Some candidates said they did not turn in expenditure reports because they did not spend any money on their campaigns. This excuse is devoid of logic. How is Senate supposed to know these candidates did not spend any money if no reports are submitted?

It is high time Senate put some teeth back into guidelines for candidates.

By making sure these candidates are prevented from serving, Senate is ensuring that the body is composed of diligent workers who are genuinely concerned about doing their jobs well. Students can feel more secure they are being adequately represented.

► MOST IMMIGRANTS STRUGGLE TO LEARN TO SPEAK ENGLISH

Editor,

I absolutely agree with William Thomas Burdette in a recent Collegian column that said immigrants should learn and understand English. It is vital that immigrants know how to speak, read and write English because that is the only way to succeed as citizens of their new country.

Very often immigrants who don't understand English are taken advantage of in all kinds of situations.

They are also discriminated against and in some cases ridiculed and made fun of, just because they could not speak English "like everybody else." The area they lose the most when they don't speak the language is certainly economics.

These immigrants usually end up in low-paying, menial, unskilled, dead-end jobs in which their employers exploit them with impunity. Thus, for those who don't speak English, the American dream is not an American dream. It is an American nightmare.

Most immigrants in this country, however, try their hardest to acquire English. I know some of them who, in their tireless quest to master the language, even sleep with the dictionary in their arms. They know in order to attain the American dream, they have to have English. Learning English is probably the most important thing they can do in America to better themselves.

English is like a road map, showing them all the niches and corners of opportunities which exist in this country. Those immigrants who speak English adapt quite readily economically, educationally, socially and even culturally in America.

For those who don't speak the language, however, America is a vast bewilderment, and they are lost.

There is nowhere to go, even though the opportunities exist for them just as much as they exist for their lucky counterparts — the lucky counterparts, who, speaking the language, zoom 180 degrees ahead of them.

These non-English speakers live in a nation of perpetual suspense and strangeness, not knowing and understanding what people are talking about. Thus, for the price of not knowing English, everyday life is a pain and a torture.

I agree immigrants should learn and understand English. However, I disagree that English should be made into law as the official language of the United States. To Burdette and all those Americans who are clamoring that English should be enacted as the official language of this country, I say it's unnecessary.

The majority of immigrants know, for their own good, and in order to capture the American dream, they have to speak English.

There is no other way. They cannot exist in America as happy and prosperous citizens as long as they cannot speak the language of the majority, or, some might say, the dominant language.

Those who are born to immigrant parents in the United States have practically no difficulty mastering English. Going to American schools and interacting with Americans every day of their lives, these children of immigrants, in fact, have difficulty retaining their mother tongue. Some of them, upset by parents who don't try hard enough to learn and acquire English, actually push and teach their parents the language of survival.

Another reason, unrelated to the above reasons, is cultural. It is fun (and colorful) to live in a country in which many languages are spoken, from Spanish to Arabic to Navajo.

Even though a smattering of languages is spoken, perhaps with the small and still unimportant exception of Spanish in the Southwest, the dominant language is still unquestionably English.

Thus, the fear of losing English to some alien language because of immigrants who don't learn and speak English, is groundless. As long as the U.S. Congress does its works in English, English is the master, ruling language. Immigrants who are bilingual only make the United States rich culturally and aesthetically.

If the United States is a country which has every nationality represented within its border, then what is wrong with having a smattering of every language spoken on the globe here, too?

It only makes the United States richer in many aspects, and this country has the right to boast it is the most diversified country on the planet.

Leave a legacy by touching someone's life

Death sucks. At around 9:30 p.m. April 15, I learned my friend Eric Dupuis had died in a motorcycle accident at the intersection of Denison and Anderson avenues.

I had the same reaction everyone does to the news of a death of someone they know. "Oh my God, no." Then I recalled my last conversation with him, exactly a week ago in front of Anderson Hall. We bitched about not going out anymore because we never have any money. He complained the weather had not been good enough to take out the bike.

I was not an incredibly close friend of Dupee's. I met him last summer at Rusty's Last Chance. Oddly enough, Dupee talked me into taking my first motorcycle ride by convincing me how safe it is. It was one of the biggest thrills of my life. There is something remarkable about riding down the highway on a motorcycle. Everything looks different when you are riding a bike. If you ever want a unique view of campus, ride through at night on a motorcycle.

I doubt I will ever get on a motorcycle again. Not because I do not believe they are safe, but because it will remind me of Dupee.

Like I said, I was not a close friend. I met him on occasion, and we had mutual friends. When I met him I had just come to town and did not know anyone. He introduced me to his circle of friends.

I will miss Dupee. I will miss his distinct voice and great sense of humor. My heart goes out to his girlfriend, family and all those who knew him.

All of us feel the confusion, anger and frustration when one of our own dies — that is why a student death makes the front page of the Collegian. We are all too young to die. We all wonder why and how something like this could happen.

What strikes me about his death is how much he touched my life despite our limited friendship. It makes me wonder how many other people have shaped my life and how many lives I might have shaped.

Without Dupee I would not have gone into Last Chance. I know that does not seem like a monumental thing, but hear me out. I had just returned from Germany, separated from my husband and enrolled in college. I was scared. I did not think I would ever fit in with the college crowd. Meeting Dupee and his friends that night let me know I would fit in, that I was not such an oddball after all. That was an important thing. I needed to know I would be accepted.

Thank you, Dupee, for showing me I could be a college student. Not a housewife and mother of two, but a college student with a beer in hand, discussing politics and wearing socks with sandals.

Thank you to all those who, in lots of ways big and small, have touched my life in some way. Thanks to those who have taken the time to e-mail me in response to a column. Thanks to the K-mart employee who restored my faith in humanity by finding my $50 bill and returning it.

I hope in some small way I have touched others through this column. Or maybe I have made someone's day a little brighter with a smile in passing or by leaving 30 minutes on a parking meter.

Our legacies are these little things, those moments every day when we touch the lives of others. Be sure you leave your legacies. Dupee left his.

We are all going to die. We are not invincible. Some people will try to place blame in an attempt to make sense of Dupee's death. Do not waste your time. We have all made split-second decisions that could have cost us our lives or the life of someone else. Nothing will bring him back. Count your blessings and go to bed.

Environmental idiots, back off

Earth Day, Shmurdth Day.

Maybe it is because I am perceived as having a liberal bent to my writing, or maybe I just give off some sort of leftist aura, but I often run into all sorts of left-wing crazy people who just assume I agree with them.

During the new-and-improved Earth Week, I get to deal with a particularly wack breed: the EcoWarriors.

I consider myself an environmentalist, albeit not a very good one. I do not recycle as much as I think I should, and I drive more than I need to. But I do want the environment preserved, mostly for aesthetic reasons.

There are a lot of cool people who are much better environmentalists than I am. There are people who are more active and more thoughtful and who have better reasons for their environment-friendly attitudes.

Then there is the Dark Side.

There are at least two brands of environmental idiocy, and both really piss me off.

■ No. 1: the EarthFirst people.

For most of human history, homo sapiens have just kind of assumed we are the most important thing on the earth, and everything else is here simply to make our life better.

EarthFirst folks make the opposite claim: that the earth and all the individual parts that make it up are more important than humanity.

This is even more idiotic than the position they are responding to. The fact is we are humans, and we have at least as much obligation to look out for each other as we do to look out for the spotted owl or what not, and we are not even very good at that.

Whether it comes from lunacy, ignorance or some pseudo-scientific religion that deifies the planet, EarthFirst people believe the world belongs to all life and maybe to the non-living parts like oceans and mountains, too.

The concept of ownership is human, of course. A bald eagle does not feel like it owns what it is flying over, and an ocean does not feel anything.

We have a responsibility to ourselves, our families, our community and everybody else, in that order. If some animals are part of your community, or you even consider them part of your family, fine. But most animals are not very social.

■ No. 2: the Technophobes.

Technophobes make even less sense than EarthFirsters. These are the people who think technology, science and progress are evil and are taking the Earth and humanity straight to hell. The Unabomber is one of these.

Technophobes want to return to a time before the industrial revolution, when life was pure, simple and happy. Unfortunately, they want to return to a time that never existed.

Let's think for a moment about pre-tech society. Some of the charming features of these happy times were open sewers, mass starvation, extraordinary rates of infant mortality and very short lives.

The technophobes must think life was better before penicillin, when polio, chicken pox, smallpox and the plague were facts of life.

They are willing to give up any kind of food they cannot grow themselves. They are willing to give up the mobility granted by trains, planes and automobiles. They are willing to give up their stereos and compact discs, which just goes to show what kind of taste in music they must have.

There are lots of other screwy environmentalists, who believe in a mixture of those two views or have some crazy ideas of their own.

Then, there are people who want the right things for the wrong reasons. These folks want hemp-made paper, not because it makes sense, but to increase the total amount of THC in the universe (a noble goal, actually). They want garbage recycled and removed so they have nice green pastures to ride their mountain bikes on.

I am not even very happy with traditional, sane environmentalists during Earth Week, though. They never take my ideas seriously.

For example, I think the only way to preserve humanity and the ecosystem that nurtures us is to expand part of our operation into space. Just think, we could build nuclear reactors on the moon, where if they melt down, it is no big deal. We could launch all our non-recyclables into the sun.

My environmentally-oriented friends do not think much of space travel.

Anyway, we should all try to think in global terms, even during the other weeks in the year. And, we should always keep in mind that it is us we are doing it for. As George Carlin said when he came to Bramlage Coliseum:

"The earth has survived ice ages, tectonic friction, cometary impacts and God knows what else, and you think a little plastic is going to screw it up? The earth isn't going anywhere, people ... we are."

Sunset Zoo celebrates Earth Day

Rick Druse
staff reporter

Earth Day celebrations at Sunset Zoological Park Saturday afternoon were marked with special speakers, an EnviroFair and children with faces painted to resemble animals.

The highlight of the day was when Rep. Sam Brownback planted a tree in the renovated prairie dog exhibit.

"One of the reasons that we are trying to plant trees is not only that they are pretty, but they serve a purpose," Angie Fenstermacher, marketing director for Sunset Zoo, said.

She said a lot of trees are being torn out of the city due to road construction, so the zoo is trying to encourage people to plant trees to replace the torn-out ones.

Area elementary schools collected aluminum cans and participated in environmental education activities. These students were recognized for their work during a ceremony at the zoo.

There was also an EnviroFair in which the public could gain information on environmental activities.

Wal-Mart sponsored the construction of an Earth Day flag that will be displayed at the store. Environmental scenes were painted on squares of fabric that will be sewn together to make the flag.

"We thought this would be a fun venture," Susan Rush, Wal-Mart green coordinator, said.

Rush was also promoting a town meeting sponsored by Wal-Mart. The meeting will ask participants to vote on environmental activities the public thinks Wal-Mart should help fund. The top two will be turned in to the district office for the final decision. The meeting will be at 6 tonight at Wal-Mart.

She said one of the topics that will be discussed is the Pillsbury Crossing cleaning project being pushed by Enviro League. The group wants to clean the area and put in nature trails.

It will also talk about the return of the recycling bins to Wal-Mart's parking lot. The bins were taken out due to the lack of sponsorship from the community, and the task was too big for Wal-Mart to handle alone, Rush said.

"We are trying to better the community, give back what people give us," Rush said.

Sunset Zoo also debuted a new exhibit in the children's zoo. Green tree pythons came from the St. Louis Zoo and are located in the Spencer Wiley Gillum Habitats Building.

► SCIENCE

Scientists aid in fiber research

Jessica White
staff reporter

Two K-State researchers are gathering a world of information from barely visible pieces of material.

David Wetzel, analytical chemist and professor of grain science, and Liling Cho, graduate student in textile chemistry, have been using state-of-the-art technology to map the chemical makeup of things only one-eighth the width of a human hair.

An infrared microspectrometer measures the vibrations atoms within a molecule make, and from this, the instrument graphs the vibrations. From this graph, people can tell what chemicals are present and how much is there.

Using an infrared microspectrometer, Cho is able to not only map the chemical makeup of a single fiber, but using a polarizer, she is able to find out how the molecules are arranged and can then find the fiber's history of processing and wear.

Wetzel said some fibers, like polyester, are chemically the same no matter where they were made. The fibers may be treated differently while they are being produced, and Cho is able to detect these differences using the microspectrometer.

"It is quite an achievement to be able to tell the chemical molecular structure of a single fiber," Wetzel said.

Cho's research on fibers could add to the knowledge and techniques used by forensic scientists.

"We're not in the business of solving crimes per se," Wetzel said, "but we're working at the edge of the technology in finding ways to get at the data."

GUEST COLUMN

Rams' Phillips represents dark side of sports

An unavoidable tag attached to life: Sometimes bad things happen to good people, and sometimes good things find bad people.

And Nebraska provided us with glaring examples from both sides, all in one short week.

■ Brook Berringer took the Cornhuskers to the 1994 national title game, and then, in his final season, took a back seat to Tommie Frazier.

No gripes.

No complaints.

Total team attitude.

Handfuls of Division-I schools would have loved to have Berringer.

The Cornhuskers could have easily won the title this year with Berringer at quarterback. But he sat patiently on the bench, watching his team cruise to another title. He thought his next big chance would come in April with the NFL Draft.

Myview

DEREK Simmons

his business degree and pilot's license would offer other opportunities.

But Berringer, who spent last week organizing and participating in a hometown benefit basketball game in Goodland, was denied any chance at professional football.

Two days before this weekend's NFL Draft, he went down in the plane he was piloting.

His family was planning a draft party this weekend, renting a satellite to watch the announcements in New York. Instead, they planned a funeral.

■ And then there's teammate Lawrence Phillips. He dragged a woman by the hair down three flights of stairs in September, and by April, he's a millionaire with a promising future in the NFL.

Phillips was taken by the St. Louis Rams as the sixth overall pick in the NFL draft, and with a media coach at his side, told the nation, "All I know is all I can do is be a good citizen, be a great football player and basically just do what I have to do to make things right."

A fat paycheck sure helps.

Phillips may not be a bad person, per se. But what Phillips did was bad. It was sickening. And now it seems like he's being rewarded in spite of his criminal behavior.

It very well could be that Phillips turns out to be a model citizen and pillar of the St. Louis community.

But he isn't yet.

He is still a man with a criminal record but good open-field speed.

I found this excerpt about Phillips on one of the draft home pages on the Internet: "In 1995, played only five games after assault conviction but ran for 206 yards on 22 carries against Michigan State..."

What the Rams and the NFL have said by letting this guy in is, "Hey, it doesn't matter what baggage you bring with you. If you can shed tacklers and score five touchdowns a game, here's your check."

It's a professional flaw that ignores ethics, morals and just plain common sense. You think young, aspiring football players don't see the message behind this?

Five teams ahead of St. Louis passed on Phillips because of his "off-the-field troubles." But the reasoning behind it was primarily public relations control. They didn't want the negative publicity or angry women's groups already included with Phillips' luggage. It's not so much what he did, it's what he now represents.

That, too, is sickening.

League commissioner Paul Tagliabue should have organized a stand in conjunction with team owners to keep this guy out; to send a message that being a good citizen is equally important as running a 4.3 40-yard dash. Phillips should have been told to prove what he said about making things right before the check was signed.

I've always been a firm believer in second chances for mistakes. But what Phillips did was no mistake.

We're talking about three flights of stairs.

And what was left behind was the victim.

Kate McEwen was told last week that her Nebraska basketball scholarship was being revoked. She will be given a non-basketball scholarship to continue her education, but any goals or dreams she had about playing are gone.

Pete Goering, a columnist for the Topeka Capital-Journal, wrote about McEwen last week. Nebraska coach Angela Beck was quoted as saying McEwen's basketball career "really wasn't going anywhere."

McEwen suffered through back injuries her freshman year, and without the Phillips incident this year, who knows what she could have done. She won't be given that chance.

I don't think she ever really had one.

In the sports world, I guess, chances don't carry prerequisites.

I just hope someday, if my son is holding autographs from Berringer in one hand and Phillips in the other, I will somehow be able to explain to him that Berringer's is worth more.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Patterson excited, confident

Dan Lewerenz
contributing writer

"I'm going to introduce to you a bright star in women's basketball in America, and she's our head coach — Debbie Patterson."

With those words, K-State athletic director Max Urick ushered in a new era for Wildcat women's basketball. Patterson, a former assistant at Northern Illinois and Southern Illinois who helped Vanderbilt to a 106-26 record through the last five years, was officially introduced as K-State's women's basketball coach Friday.

"The first thing I'd like to share with you is how excited I am about being the head basketball coach at Kansas State University," Patterson said.

"I feel very, very confident about the potential for K-State basketball. This is an exciting time for K-State, going into the Big 12. I believe today is a new start."

Patterson met with players Thursday night before the announcement to discuss goals and expectations for the coming year, including some talk of offensive and defensive styles.

"I want to play a style of basketball consistent with the abilities of our players," she said. "I want to play an intelligent, controlled style of basketball where we score a lot of points. And I want to play aggressive defense."

"I think we're in a good situation here. We have a core of young players who understand K-State and who identify with and understand the situation here. We have five or six players who have played significant minutes in games."

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Debbie Patterson, K-State's new women's basketball coach, addresses the media at a press conference Friday morning. Although Patterson will not be able to have practices for several months, she said she is excited about coaching here.

Six-foot-one forward/center Angie Finkes averaged 30.3 points and 13

Nicky Ramage, a 6'1" forward from Little River, averaged 19.7 points and 8.0 rebounds for Little River High School's undefeated state championship team.

TENNIS

Cats dominate Missouri

Shane McCormick
contributing writer

The K-State women's tennis team continued its successful spring campaign with a 7-0 drumming of the Missouri Tigers.

It was the last home match for the Wildcats and for senior Karina Kuregian. Kuregian has established herself as one of the best players to ever take to the courts at K-State.

Kuregian was honored for her accomplishments with a little ceremony before the dual. Although this was her last home match, Kuregian said it had not really sunk in.

"I haven't really realized it yet," she said. "Probably after the season is over, it will have really sunk in."

Coach Steve Bietau also said the feeling has not sunk in.

"We still have a lot of tennis to play," he said. "It's when we come out to these courts and she's not here, that's when it will really sink in. She's the best I've seen here at K-State, though."

The Cats started the dual with a sweep in the doubles portion. It was the fifth time in six matches the Cats won the doubles point.

At No. 3, sophomores Chris Schulte and Dinah Watson struggled a bit but were able to pull out an 8-5 victory. Schulte said playing together for the first time created some difficulties.

"We've only been able to practice twice together," she said. "We definitely need to work on our communication."

In singles competition, the Cats were nothing less than dominating. In all six matches, the Cats lost a total of just five games.

Playing at No. 1 singles, Dorodnova cruised to a 6-0, 6-0 victory. The win improved Dorodnova's record to 11-4 on the season.

Kuregian continued her impressive season with a 6-0, 6-2 victory over Allison Shepperd at the No. 2 spot. Kuregian improved her record to a perfect 13-0.

"It's (the record) not something I really think about or worry about," she said. "I feel I'm very close to playing my best tennis right now."

Schulte had no problems filling in for the injured Nikki Lagerstrom at the No. 6 spot. She posted a 6-0, 6-1 win over Lundstrum.

"I didn't want to come out and play too tight, so I just tried to keep loose throughout the match," Schulte said. Bietau said he was pleased with his team's performance in the windy conditions.

"These conditions are tough to play in. It's really a test of your concentration," he said. "I'm very pleased on how the team fought through those conditions today."

The win moved the Cats to 10-5 overall and 4-1 in the Big 8. The win was the seventh in eight duals for the Cats.

Cats' bats return, swipe 2 from OU

John Berggren

After Friday night's opening game of a three-game series at home with Oklahoma, K-State looked like it might be in for a long weekend. But the Wildcats were able to bounce back from a 12-10 loss on Friday to win games two and three by scores of 8-2 and 7-3, respectively.

Friday, K-State jumped to a 9-2 lead after six innings. It was led all the way by starter Eric Yanz, who went 6-1/3 innings, giving up seven hits and four runs on three errors. After the first six innings, K-State fell apart, losing by a final score of 12-10.

Offensively, through the first six innings, K-State scored on a sacrifice fly from third baseman Todd Fereday in the first, RBIs by first baseman Jason Bichelmeyer and center fielder Adam Green in the second.

Designated hitter David Hendrix stroked a two-run homer in the third. Fereday tallied another RBI.

GASKINS DRAFTED IN 4TH ROUND BY ST. LOUIS RAMS

Only one Wildcat found a home in this weekend's 1996 National Football League draft — linebacker Percell Gaskins.

Gaskins was drafted by the St. Louis Rams in the fourth round of the draft.

Gaskins will not be the lone Big 8 star on the Rams' playing field. St. Louis made a splash in the draft when it nabbed controversial Lawrence Phillips, a running back out of Nebraska. Phillips has been involved in domestic disputes that caused some franchises to overlook him in the draft.

Phillips was the sixth pick taken in the first round.

Nebraska and Oklahoma led Big 8 programs in players drafted, with six players drafted from each school.

From Nebraska, along with Phillips, defensive back Tyrone Williams (Green Bay), center Aaron Graham (Arizona), defensive tackle Christian Peter (New England), linebacker

Doug Colman (New York Giants) and defensive back Tony Veland (Denver) all joined the ranks of professional football players.

Oklahoma defensive end Cedric Jones was the highest Big 8 draft pick, going No. 5 in the first round to the New York Giants.

Colorado had five players drafted, while Kansas had four and Oklahoma State and Missouri each had one.

In Big 12 action, Texas A & M led the crusade with six players drafted, including linebacker Reggie Brown. Brown was picked by the Detroit Lions as the 17th pick overall.

Baylor was next with four players drafted, and Texas Tech and Texas each followed with two picks.

The No. 1 draft pick overall went to the New York Jets, who chose wide receiver Keyshawn Johnson out of Southern Cal.

HARKER ADMITTED TO HOSPITAL FOR SEIZURES

K-State baseball team member Brad Harker was admitted to a hospital Saturday night after having a seizure but was released Sunday.

Harker was brutally assaulted by an unknown person last summer while participating on the Columbus Americans' collegiate baseball team.

Harker was never able to positively identify his assailant, and as a result the assailant has not been taken into custody.

Baseball coach Mike Clark said at the time of Harker's seizure, Harker was not taking any medication to prevent one.

"After an ordeal like he went through, it's common for people to have seizures," Clark said. "He wasn't on any kind of medication for seizures up until this incident, and after this the doctors will probably prescribe something for him."

Harker has become somewhat of a role model for his team this season through all he has battled.

"The whole team went right over to the hospital after it happened," Clark said. "The kids are concerned for Brad because he is such a big part of the team. It's things like this that really make the kids focus."

REVIEW

'Wife' roars with funny innuendoes, dynamic characters

Abbi Hake
staff writer

It was a time of jealous husbands, unfaithful wives and gallant playboys.

This is the Restoration period in England. This is also "The Country Wife."

This witty story of infidelity is half funny lines, great acting and strategic blocking and half beautiful, elaborate costumes.

The intricately designed gowns look less like a costume and more like the real thing.

The velvet, pearls and various materials meld together, making a period costume that reeks of the time.

The ladies also don constricting corsets that squeeze some business into the play.

The costumes do not stand alone, though.

The blocking is intertwined so much that the costumes become part of the show. The corset and cleavage make a lovely handle for the lewd, crass womanizers to grab hold and draw their women near.

Although the set was less elaborate, its simple nature and rotating base made for quick scene changes.

The author of the comedy, William

Wycherley, cleverly named the characters appropriately for their personalities. The most obvious is Mr. Harry Horner, an extreme womanizer, who thrives on luring other men's young, beautiful wives into his bed.

Mr. Sparkish is another whose name implies that he is somewhat dynamic. Although he is one of the most recognized and funny characters, he is also quite annoying, both to the other characters and to the audience, who seemed taken back by his flamboyant personality.

At face value the show is comedy that provokes a few chuckles, but behind the facade of sexual innuendoes and witty, sly remarks, the show, like many of its kind, achieves a deeper meaning.

The meaning becomes evident in the end after a performance filled with lies, disguise and constant bashing of the opposite sex.

Phrases like "good wives should remain ignorant" are constantly coming from the mouths of the male characters. Although this behavior may be typical of the day, the comments are no less abusive.

The lesson learned seems to be one of the many taught by love. Every character, with the exception of a few minor parts, learns how not to be a cuckold, but more importantly, each learns what love really is.

Among the most witty phrases are the frequent asides. These clever phrases, directed at the audience by the character, are sometimes hard to catch but well worth the effort to seek out.

To a conservative audience the show might be considered crass, ludicrous and possibly appalling.

To a more liberal crowd it is absolutely hilarious, each crass comment a godsend.

Chock full of sexual innuendoes, breast fondling and hip gyrations, "The Country Wife" shows a tale of infidelity that will not soon be forgotten.

RICK DRUSE/Collegian

Melissa Drain, second-year veterinary student, prepares an Eastern screech owl for release at Pillsbury Crossing for Project Release.

Project Release frees wildlife

QUICKREAD

► Project Release is an organization that, when possible, rehabilitates injured wildlife and returns birds and mammals back to their natural habitat.

Rick Druse
staff reporter

As the eastern screech owl flew from the hands of its captor, it faced the world of freedom once again.

"It's the best feeling in the world," Melissa Drain, second-year veterinary student, said. "To see them fly off is like the ultimate supreme award."

Drain is a volunteer for Project Release. The organization takes injured wildlife and tries to rehabilitate and return them to the wild.

The group deals with all aspects of wildlife, from raptors, such as hawks, to mammals.

The group works closely with the College of Veterinary Medicine and especially with the exotic animals division.

Injured animals are brought to the veterinary hospital and checked by students.

If raptors are able to be rehabilitated, they are taken to a farm on Deep Creek Road that has flyway cages for the rehabilitation of the birds.

Songbirds are taken care of in the homes of volunteers because they need higher maintenance than raptors, Drain said.

If the animal cannot heal well enough to be released back into the wild, the group will try to find homes for the animals in zoos. If a home at a zoo cannot be found, the animal might be kept by the group for educational purposes.

Drain said raptors and other animals are taken to schools and other events for the purpose of educating the public about wildlife.

Some birds have to be euthanized if the injuries are too severe for rehabilitation.

"We give birds the benefit of the doubt because they can heal miraculously," Drain said.

Drain said most of the birds Project Release works with are injured by man-made accidents.

The Eastern screech owl that was released had flown into a sliding glass door.

She said there is a problem with people bringing in young birds that are learning to fly and thinking they are going to be abandoned by the parents.

Drain said a person should wait at least 24 hours to see if the parent birds come back to take care of the young before deciding to pick up the young birds.

As the population grows and cities expand and encroach upon the habitat of the wild, people have to take responsibilities for their actions, and that is what Project Release is trying to accomplish, Drain said.

Arrest rate climbs due to drug crimes

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — For the third-straight year, drug arrests rose in 1994 on American college campuses, according to a new survey.

Results being released Sunday by the Chronicle of Higher Education revealed 6,138 drug violations — 23 percent more than in 1993. This follows increases of 34 percent in 1993 and 46 percent in 1992.

Alcohol contributed to even more arrests. There were 15,923 liquor-related offenses in 1994, up 5.6 percent from 1993.

Drug arrests are up partly because more private colleges are gaining arresting authority for their campus law enforcement officers, said Douglas F. Tuttle, public safety director at the University of Delaware and president of the International Association of Campus Law Enforcement Administrators.

Also, increased awareness about drug and alcohol abuse has led to more tips to campus police departments, he says.

"In our case, we're doing more training with the residence hall staffs so they know what to look for — know what the smell (of marijuana) really is," Tuttle said. "I think they realize to a greater extent that drugs and alcohol bring with them other problems."

"Any time you have a major amount of drugs, you have the potential for lots of money and a robbery. And you don't want outsiders coming in looking for a good time."

In its annual survey, the Chronicle asked about 850 colleges with more than 5,000 students to submit copies of their campus crime reports; 831 complied. Colleges that receive federal money are required to compile campus crime statistics and provide them to students and staff.

Because of fluctuating enrollments and participation, each year's survey contains a slightly different group of institutions.

The campus survey reported:

■ 19 murders in 1994, compared with 15 in 1993.

■ 1,001 forcible sex offenses, up 12 percent from 892.

■ 1,375 robberies, up less than 1 percent from 1993.

■ 3,049 aggravated assaults, down 3 percent from 3,140.

■ 19,172 burglaries, down 7.4 percent from 20,693.

■ 6,624 auto thefts, down 8.2 percent from 7,219.

■ The number of weapons violations remained steady at about 1,500.

"Rape, aggravated assault, robbery and larceny are heavily drug- and alcohol-related," said Alan J. Lizotte, executive director of the Consortium for Higher Education Campus Crime Research at the State University of New York at Albany.

"By cracking down on those sorts of things, they can reduce other crimes," he told the Chronicle. "And in the longer run, students will get the message, and alcohol and drug crimes will go down, too."

According to the survey, liquor-related offenses dropped to 99 last year from 154 in 1993 at Ohio State University.

Ron Michalec, campus police chief at the Columbus, Ohio, institution, attributes the decline to efforts to sponsor non-alcoholic events, such as concerts and all-night and "mocktail parties," to dissuade students from going up and down High Street, which runs alongside the campus and has 32 liquor establishments in a quarter-mile section. He says the campus also has joined with others in the community to help revitalize neighborhoods where students live.

The statistics are affected by several factors.

Some campuses are closer to metropolitan areas, and all the schools' crime figures reflect arrests of students and staff as well as outsiders. Institutions that have hospitals used by the general public, for example, could have higher crime statistics.

Differences in the way schools report and categorize crimes also can skew the numbers, the survey said.

Tuttle conceded some colleges manipulate their crime statistics so their campus does not appear unsafe to parents and students. But he says he's seen a trend toward providing reliable numbers by schools that no longer think reporting them hampers admissions.

"I don't think we've reached 100 percent yet," he said.

Some schools, for example, might report stolen items from an unlocked dorm room as a theft, instead of a burglary, by using a state instead of the federal definition of burglary, Tuttle says. Colleges do not have to report thefts on their campus crime reports.

In some states, a burglary isn't a burglary unless a person breaks in, Tuttle says. The federal definition defines a burglary as the unlawful entry into a building or other structure with the intent to commit a felony or theft.

in the fifth, and after Paul Cranford and Ryan Buell singled, Chris Hess singled, scoring both runners.

Relievers Mickey Blount, Brian Thompson and David Johnson finished the game, allowing eight runs on five walks and five hits in the final 2-2/3 innings.

K-State gave up six errors in the game. Three were charged to shortstop Heath Schesser. K-State coach Mike Clark said the errors would not have happened but for the pitching.

"Pitching and defense wins ball games," Clark said. "Ten runs should have been enough. Schesser had some tough plays, but they were plays he shouldn't have had to make if our pitching was worth a hill of beans."

Game two for the Cats was a different story pitching-wise as starter Jon Oiseth went the distance, giving up two runs on 10 hits, with seven strikeouts and five walks.

Oiseth's performance coasted the Cats to an 8-2 victory and gave him his first complete performance of the year and K-State's third.

Oklahoma jumped on the board, first scoring two runs in the top of the third. K-State then put a run on the board with a solo home run by Bichelmeier in the fifth.

K-State scored three more in the sixth and seventh innings and one more in the eighth to finish the game.

Round three of the series saw more of what K-State showed in the second game with a solid pitching performance by Matt Koeman.

Koeman went 8-1/3 innings, giving up three runs on nine hits and three walks and seven strikeouts. Koeman said even with his good performance, he started out flat.

"My arm felt dead early, and I was kind of scared, because my arm usually doesn't go dead until late in the game," Koeman said. "But I felt a lot better in the fifth inning. I just got in good rhythm and started rolling."

Koeman yielded to Johnson in the ninth, who battled to pick up his fourth save of the year.

Fereday led K-State's bats Sunday, going five-of-five on the day with four singles and a double. Fereday's five hits marked his first five-hit game as a K-Stater.

"It's great to come back after a game like Friday night," Clark said. "The kids showed some great characteristics, and Matt looked the Matt of old. It's just a matter of getting confidence and keeping our heads up through the slumps."

DEFENSE

Students had a chance to test some of the strategies they learned on the black-belt students.

Amy Estes, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, was one of the K-State women to attend the seminar.

"It gives you a lot of good ideas of how to get out of a tight situation. There are lots of things you wouldn't normally think of," Estes said.

Estes practiced defense techniques that helped her escape from her faux attacker, whether he was holding her by the arms, around her neck or around her stomach.

"I learned to assess the situation, attack and get out of there," Estes said.

Chris Brown, senior in pre-medicine, organized the self-defense seminar.

"Through his awareness here on campus, Chris found out the sororities were interested more," Bix said.

Brown is a student at Yu's

Academy. He travels almost three hours to Harrisonville, Mo., to attend classes.

"It's kind of like a loyalty to the academy. It's more like my family, not just a club," Brown said.

John Heitman, a junior at the University of Missouri in Kansas City, has been attending Yu's academy for 10 years.

"The biggest thing when you start out is physical, but then you find out it's more mental than anything else. It helps your discipline, confidence, tenets and courtesy," Heitman said.

Students at Yu's Academy learn to attack, defend themselves and recover from attacks.

"It's a little bit of insurance," Bix said.

Some basic safety rules for self-defense include walking only in familiar areas, and planning a route before leaving to avoid dangerous areas.

Estes said the seminar gave her more confidence.

"I hope I don't have to use it, but I will if I have to," Estes said.

FIBER

Forensics experts could use techniques like this to tell at which factories a fiber could and could not have been made. They can also tell what kinds of things have been put on the fiber, like anti-stain finish that has been applied to a carpet, or conditioner or hair spray on a human hair.

Wetzel said although Cho was unable to get funding from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the FBI did pay for Cho to go to its academy for three weeks in 1994, where she practiced using microspectroscopy in forensic science.

Fibers are not the only things being studied by Wetzel and Cho.

While at Brookhaven National Laboratory, Wetzel and Cho were able to use a machine similar to the one at K-State, but it was able to use even smaller things. While at Brookhaven, Wetzel was able to look at a hair sliced lengthwise and find a record of drug use. Each incident of drug use is recorded in the hair.

"That little dot represents 22 minutes of a day's growth of hair," he said.

At K-State, Wetzel has been doing most of his research with the microspectrometer on kernels of wheat. He said he can study new varieties of wheat using just one or two kernels, instead of waiting for several generations of wheat to be grown.

Sales tax funds lighting project

Richea Lecklider
staff reporter

Students and faculty will soon be more confident of their safety on campus at night due to an improved lighting project that will begin this summer.

With partial funding from the City/University Sales Tax Fund totaling $40,000 and another $40,000 from the University's Renovation and Repair Fund, eight areas on campus will soon have more lighting.

Mark Taussig, University landscape architect, said each light cost about $3,000.

"Campus safety is an important issue, so this was one of the top projects," Taussig said.

In August 1994, several students and staff members of the University surveyed areas on campus to get an idea of places needing more lighting. Eight areas were found that needed additional lighting, Taussig said.

Some of these areas include the walkway between Dickens and Bluemont halls, the area around the International Student Center, walkways between McCain Auditorium, Kedzie and Calvin halls and the walkway along Denison Avenue between the Durland Hall driveway and the Natatorium.

The lighting improvement project will take place throughout the summer and might extend into the fall, Taussig said.

The lighting project will hopefully be complete by October, when it starts to get dark at an earlier time, Taussig said.

"KSU Facilities will be installing the lights," he said.

New lighting to improve campus safety

A lighting improvement project this summer will increase safety on campus by installing lights in underlit areas. The areas in need of more lighting were determined by a student/staff survey in August 1994. The project, funded by the City/University Sales Tax Fund and the University's Renovation and Repair Fund, should be complete by October.

Stink in Anderson blamed on skunks

■ Animals might have squirted air conditioning unit outside of building

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

Early Monday morning, John Struve smelled a skunk in Anderson Hall.

Struve, director of the budget office, said he came to work at 4 a.m. and noticed a slight skunk smell on the east side of the building.

"Inside, there was a very slight skunk smell," Struve said. "When I went home, my shirt smelled like skunk."

"It was a lot stronger on the outside than the inside," he said. "It was definitely not a squirrel."

Bill Muir, assistant to the vice president, said the skunk had squirted the air-conditioning unit outside.

"It sure made for fun kinds of smells," Muir said. "I'm in charge of smells."

John Fairman, assistant to the vice president for University relations, said, "It's a little redundant to say there's a skunk."

Struve said, "Just how many skunks are there in Anderson Hall?"

Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, said, "I smelled one."

Rawson continued the interview off the record.

Anderson's doors were propped open during the early morning by an unidentified administrator. The doors remained open throughout the day.

Andy Wefald, graduate student in business administration, said presidential poodles Tuffy and Popcorn have had their rabies vaccinations this year.

President Jon Wefald had no comment about the skunk situation.

Rhonda Phillips, secretary/receptionist in the office of the president, said the smell filtered into her office.

"It really hasn't been that bad," Phillips said. "It hasn't been a bad nuisance."

The sickly smell of a skunk is not a problem, but there are dangers involved when coming into contact with a skunk.

Dr. Deborah Briggs, director of the Rabies/RFFIT Laboratory at the College of Veterinary Medicine, said an exposure to skunk spray is not an exposure to rabies.

"Just getting the spray off you is the hard part," Briggs said.

"The real problems come when a skunk gets in contact with a cat or dog who is not vaccinated," she said.

"Then, those cats and dogs get in contact with a human."

Briggs suggested getting and keeping your pets vaccinated.

"Should your pets come into contact with a rabid skunk, they should get re-vaccinated, and the owner should watch them for 45 days," she said.

Briggs said this is the time of year she sees more skunks moving around.

"I'm not surprised to hear about this," she said.

Dr. Rosalie K. Behnke, D.V.M., M.S. of the Blue Hills Animal Hospital, said she vaccinates cats and dogs once yearly.

"Some products can go three years between vaccinations, but they don't have a 100-percent guarantee at the end of the third year," Behnke said.

Behnke said she suggests to minimize the exposure of your pet to a skunk, you should keep them in a fenced yard and on a leash during walks.

Behnke said there are products, such as Skunk-Off, you can use to take the smell off pets.

For humans, it's much more difficult.

Taking a bath in tomato juice is an old wives' tale that works.

"We have all kinds of little animals running around this campus," Muir said.

Dole wants contributions to be investigated

Associated Press

AVON, Mass. — A businessman who allegedly funneled illegal campaign contributions from his employees to Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Monday he was unaware of any illegal fund-raising activities.

Simon C. Fireman, the president of Aqua-Leisure Industries and a national vice chairman of finance for Dole's presidential campaign, said he was deeply troubled by the charges.

"To my knowledge, there were no violations of any federal campaign finance laws," Fireman said in a statement.

Also on Monday, the Dole campaign said the Kansas Republican wants an investigation into the allegations that his campaign received thousands of dollars in illegal contributions from Aqua-Leisure workers.

In a letter to the Federal Election Commission Monday, Dole campaign general counsel Douglas Wurth said the campaign "is concerned by those allegations and requests the Federal Election Commission to conduct an inquiry into their merits."

"Senator Dole and the campaign have made it clear that contributions will be raised in full compliance with the federal election laws," Wurth wrote. He added the inquiry would help determine whether any contributions should be returned.

Last year Fireman, his workers and their families sent the Dole campaign 40

News Digest

► BILL WOULD DISCOURAGE ATTEMPTS AT RECORD FLIGHTS

FREDERICK, Md. (AP) — The nation's largest pilots group came out in support Monday of a proposed law that would prohibit flights like the one that killed 7-year-old Jessica Dubroff.

The bill would make it illegal to turn over the controls of an airplane to an unlicensed pilot attempting to set an aro-nautical record, engage in an aeronautical competition or perform an aeronautical feat.

The bill would not set an age limit for young flyers but would remove the temptation of getting into the record books.

The Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association has never supported record flights by children because media attention can lead to bad decisions, said Warren Morningstar, spokesman for the Frederick-based organization.

Jessica, her father, Lloyd Dubroff, and Joe Reid, her flight instructor, were killed April 11 shortly after taking off in heavy, near-freezing rain in Cheyenne, Wyo.

PALESTINIAN BASES SUSTAIN ATTACKS FROM ISRAELI WARPLANES

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli warplanes turned to a new target in Lebanon Monday, attacking the heavily fortified base of a Palestinian group in hills outside Beirut after 11 days of focusing on Hezbollah guerrillas.

On the 12th day of fighting, Israeli air force jets hit a command base for the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. Like Hezbollah, the Popular Front opposes the Middle East peace process. The Syria-based group has frequently attacked Israel over the years but has not been directly involved in the recent fighting.

The choice of targets suggested growing Israeli frustration over efforts to pin down the elusive Hezbollah guerrillas, who are largely invisible in the valleys of south Lebanon.

The raid was the first in or near Beirut since Israeli warplanes rocketed Hezbollah strongholds in the southern suburbs last Tuesday.

MEAT EATERS RISK CANCER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Like your steak well done? Lots of pan drippings?

Not a healthful choice, said the National Cancer Institute.

The latest research suggests that cooking meat too long — and at too high a temperature — increases the risk of cancer.

And pan gravy? Better not even think about it.

For those who enjoy steaks, the researchers said a prudent choice is to cook meat through — blood-dripping rare isn't a good idea either — but not so it's well done. And cook it at a relatively low temperature so the outside doesn't turn brown.

Burning meat on the outside introduces another class of carcinogens — polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons.

These are especially common in barbecue.

COMATOSED WOMAN HAS BABY

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — It might have been the drugs that caused her to smile and the contractions that made her squeeze his hand, but Aaron Marker would like to think his comatose wife was thinking about their new baby.

Jill Marker, 34, gave birth to Barron Lloyd Marker on Friday, four months after being beaten during a robbery and lapsing into a coma.

"She was alert and had her eyes open," Mr. Marker said.

The 5-pound, 15-ounce boy has a clubfoot and purple spots that doctors believe are the result of one of his mother's medications.

"Everything can be fixed," Mr. Marker said.

"They can fix his foot. They can fix his spots. A lot more could have gone wrong."

Mrs. Marker had seizures from the stress of the birth and was temporarily put back on a ventilator.

Now that the baby has been born, doctors say they may be more rigorous with her medication to try to bring her out of the coma.

On Dec. 9, Mrs. Marker was found lying in the back of the retail store she managed. She had been beaten severely, and money was missing from the register. She was rushed to the hospital, and her heart stopped beating, but doctors used electric shocks to revive her.

BOMBECK DIES AFTER SURGERY

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Erma Bombeck, the housewife humorist whose wry take on suburban life — from cleaning toilets to getting the kids to take out the trash — earned her a wall of fame of yellowing columns on refrigerators across America, died Monday after a kidney transplant. She was 69.

"Erma Bombeck taught those of us who write columns that the funniest things are the things that our readers know the best — houses, cars, kitchens, and of course, kids," fellow humor columnist Dave Barry said.

Bombeck died at a hospital in San Francisco, where she underwent a transplant earlier this month.

The titles of her books reveal her way of looking at the world: "I Lost Everything in the Postnatal Depression," "The Grass Is Always Greener Over the Septic Tank," "If Life Is a Bowl of Cherries, What Am I Doing in the Pits?" and "When You Look Like Your Passport Photo, It's Time to Go Home."

Bombeck began her column in 1965. It appeared twice a week in about 600 newspapers, amusing readers with her gentle, self-deprecating humor.

KREMLIN SPLURGES ON SILVER

FLENSBURG, Germany (AP) — While millions of Russian workers scrimp and wait for back wages, the Kremlin has gone shopping for silver.

Earlier this year, the Kremlin ordered 6,000 sumptuous pieces of hand-crafted sterling silver, including caviar bowls, champagne buckets and flatware, to outfit four presidential residences.

German silversmiths Robbe and Berking won't say how much the total order was worth, but the company's dessert spoons cost $95 a piece. The average Russian worker earns about $150 a month.

The silver order has not been reported by the Russian media, and Kremlin officials were not eager to discuss it.

"I am not a spaniel but a serious man. And people should not call me for all kinds of stupid information," the deputy head of the Kremlin's maintenance department, Alexander Derkach, told the Associated Press in Moscow.

Bands to offer unique sounds

Phil Kellum
staff reporter

Two of the nation's top ska bands team up with two of the Midwest's top ska bands tonight in Kansas City.

The Scofflaws, the Pietasters, Isaac Green and the Skalars, and the Mad Butchers are playing a huge ska show tonight at the Daily Grind in Kansas City.

The Mad Butchers, from Kalamazoo, Mich., will kick the evening off in fine style.

They are a new band on the ska scene, having only formed several months ago, and this is their first tour. They feature a former member of Detroit ska band the Parka Kings on trumpet.

They play a mix of ska and punk that has landed them on the upcoming Midwest ska compilation compact disc, "Return of American Skathic 4."

The Mad Butchers also have released a three-song demo tape that was released only to fanzines and radio stations, and a new 7-inch single was released recently on Beat Hotel Records, based out of Detroit.

St. Louis' own Isaac Green and the Skalars occupy the second spot on the bill.

They have recently released a new 7-inch single on Kansas City's JoCo Ska Records titled "Strikeout Summer" and featuring three songs.

With their triple female vocals, four-person horn section, and Isaac himself on "steps and shouts," Isaac Green and the Skalars really stand out with their brand of traditional-sounding ska mixed with a bit of TwoTone era ska stage presence.

The Pietasters, from Blacksburg, Va., are the co-headliners of the event. They are touring in support of both their 1995 CD, titled "OoLooLoo," and their brand new live CD, which was just released last week, titled "The Pietasters Are Strapped Live."

The Scofflaws, from New York City, will close the evening of ska. Moon SKA NYC released their newest CD, "Ska In Hi-Fi," late last year.

The Scofflaws are led by vocalists Richie Brooks and Buford O'Sullivan.

They are known for crazy live shows, which feature them running around the stage after each other, while still maintaining a soulful, upbeat ska groove to keep the crowd dancing.

"This should be one of the best shows I've been to all year. My favorites are the Pietasters. I like the Scofflaws, but I've never seen the Scofflaws before," Mandy Stone, junior in wildlife biology, said.

"I've seen the Pietasters and Isaac Green and the Skalars before, and I loved them," Jennifer Fitzgerald, sophomore in modern languages, said.

"I think definitely it's definitely worth the drive, because my boyfriend saw the Scofflaws and the Pietasters in West Virginia and said it was one of the best shows he's ever seen. I'm really looking forward to it," Fitzgerald said.

SEXUAL PREDATOR ACT

Court rules to detain 7 offenders

Associated Press

TOPEKA — The U.S. Supreme Court granted a stay Monday allowing the state to keep seven violent sexual offenders in custody until it decides whether it will rule on the constitutionality of the state's Sexual Predators Act.

Attorney General Carla Stovall is appealing a Kansas Supreme Court ruling that struck down the 1995 law. The men, who are being held at Larned State Hospital, could have been released today when the Kansas Supreme Court's stay expired.

"We're ecstatic," Stovall said just before a news conference commemorating Victims Rights Week. "This is a good sign that they may, indeed, hear our petition."

On March 1, the state's highest court ruled in a 4-3 decision that the state's sex predator law was unconstitutional because it denied defendants due legal process.

The law allows the state to civilly commit sexually violent predators to hospitals after they have been released from prison.

The question arose when the state committed Leroy Hendricks, who was convicted of child molestation, to the Larned State Hospital for treatment.

In her petition to the U.S. Supreme Court, Stovall contends that the law is narrowly tailored to serve the interests of Kansas both in treating sexual offenders and in protecting society from their actions.

Stovall said the stay probably will last 30 days, or until the nation's high court decides whether it will hear the appeal.

If the U.S. Supreme Court does not rule on the case, letting the Kansas Supreme Court decision stand, a bill the Legislature recently passed would go into effect, possibly keeping the men institutionalized.

Legislators said the new law essentially would have the same effect as current law, but would remove the constitutional question by keeping the predators locked up for mental health reasons instead of criminal reasons.

During her news conference on victims' rights, Stovall said of the U.S. Supreme Court's stay: "That is great. That's the best victims' rights news there is."

Stovall's news conference publicized an "angel tree" on the first floor Statehouse rotunda to memorialize victims.

The display includes 75 angels and a table full of victims' rights handouts. It will remain in the Capitol throughout the week.

Stovall also attended a march for victims in Johnson County and observed the issuance of a victims' rights proclamation in Wyandotte County.

COLLEGIAN opinion

Rededicating ourselves to the founders' ideals

QUICKread

► As our century celebration comes to a close, we rededicate ourselves to the principles this newspaper was founded upon.

More than 100 years ago, the editors of the Collegian dedicated the newspaper to the service of students. They wanted to run a newspaper that would provide students an outlet for their opinions, their concerns, their issues.

And so they wrote, "It will be our purpose to speak as the voice of the students on all occasions. Where there is need of improvement, we want to be found. Where there is work to be done, we want our hand to be at the wheel. Where the student's interests are involved, we will exert every effort to secure justice."

A century later, the Collegian still continues to do that job.

As our centennial celebration draws to a close, we want to rededicate ourselves to serving the students for the next 100 years.

First and foremost, we will endeavor to print the truth. While that truth may not be popular with the administration or those in power, the first duty of a journalist is to provide the truth of events to readers. Students deserve to know the events on campus, and we will continue to inform them.

We will provide information beyond the confines of K-State, as well as be an outlet for student concerns. Students should always feel welcome to step into the newsroom and express their feelings about campus and world issues.

We pledge ourselves to continuing the freedom of speech and of the press, both on campus and nationwide. We will make sure meetings that are the public's business will be open to the public, and public records are always available.

During the next century, technology will change in ways we cannot predict or fathom. But our mission will continue to be the same — to serve the students in as many ways as possible.

TOLES

Always a bridesmaid

Myview

KEELY Schields

As a freshman at K-State, I met a soul-mate.

When I felt like going to a party, I wanted her with me, and when my friend had an urge to go out and do reckless things, she wanted me along for the ride. Her cynicism, her wild streak, her intelligence — I can think of no other person who has ever suited me so well.

In a few days, she'll be getting married. I'm happy for her, but I still can't believe this woman, who is so very much like me, is taking a step that will so clearly set her apart from me. As if it weren't enough that we have been geographically separated since the end of last semester, the past few months of planning a new life with her fiancé have already taken her another mammoth step away from me in terms of responsibility and maturity. As far as I know, she's ready, and this astounds me.

Perhaps what amazes me most is she is nearly a month younger than I am, and I can't even fathom marriage. For crying out loud, I'm only 20. I have my hands full trying to take care of myself. There is absolutely no way I would be able to offer another person the kind of devotion a marriage would require. And as far as children are concerned, forget it. I'm too much of a little girl myself to take care of another one.

A little less than three months shy of the age of 21, I feel far too young and immature to do these kinds of things. Then I think of my mother, who was married and already had both a 2-year-old son and a newborn son when she was not quite 21. She was tackling marriage, motherhood and everything that goes with it at the same point when I'm essentially concerned with making sure I eat, sleep and do my homework.

Maybe it's a generational thing, yet that strikes me as too easy an explanation. After all, my friend is within a month of my own age, which kind of implies she belongs to the same generation, and she's stepping up to the altar. Besides her, I have two other friends my age tying the knot this summer, as well as two more who are engaged to be married next summer.

Are they ready, though? I guess so. The thing is, the ones now sporting big diamonds don't seem all that different than they did when they were sans band. They still act a lot like me.

True, they're not married yet, but in talking even briefly with them, I find there are a few faint signs — besides the ring — of the magnitude of the life change they'll be making soon. They just appear to be talking and looking in directions I never gave much thought to. Not to sound too sappy, but it's funny how a girl's new "best friend" changes her perspective. If I sound jealous, that's only because I am. All I can tell is everyone and her dog is getting married, moving beyond, while I lag behind, choking on their dust. I have no yearning to be married, but I'm going to miss my friends because, by necessity, they're becoming different from me.

I think necessity is the key word here. Listening to my classmates, I've come to know a little bit about quite a few traditional students like myself, who have only themselves to look out for.

There are also those, my age or older or younger, who are noticeably different, because they are married, or they have a child, or they are financially dependent upon themselves. Independent of age, they've had no choice but to take a step up in responsibility.

I guess you grow up when you have to.

"I've collected T-shirts, posters, booklets and food. I bet you could even get a free adhesive bandage from Lafene Health Center, if you so desired."

LESSONS IN SCROUNGING

Myview

RUSSELL Fortmeyer

I'm not too shabby at doing this, as my friends kindly refer to me as "Freeloader Fortmeyer." (At least, they will now refer to me in this manner since I've conveniently used this alliteration for comic effect.)

I've collected T-shirts, posters, booklets and food. I bet you could even get a free adhesive bandage from Lafene Health Center, if you so desired. Oh, did I mention food?

If you're on campus the last day of school before a holiday, or on one of those big holidays where we got screwed and have to go to school, numerous campus offices have parties.

These offices include, but are not limited to, academic departments, deans' offices, Anderson Hall "suites," general student services offices and student offices.

What you'll find awaiting you behind each secretary's desk is a delectable array of homemade and store-bought veggies, cookies, cakes, pies and fruit. The hard part is finding a reason to be allowed to feast.

In the past, I've used such puppy-dog comments as "I was up all night in studio and haven't eaten a thing," "Food stamps don't cover fudge," "I'm getting this plate for President Wefald" and "I'm majoring in bakery science, mind if I sample your goods?"

During Open House, you can literally eat yourself sick with free donut samples at the Bakery Science kitchen in Shellenberger Hall. Just make sure you minutely change your appearance each time you go through the line.

I have yet to be turned away. This does, in a roundabout way, practically make me an expert on campus food varieties. I'd definitely have to say the Office of Student Publications has, far and away, the best cuisine of all freeloader joints on campus. Check it out next Christmas.

Perhaps an easier way to get free food is to join a club or organization — Student Government Association comes to mind. You'll no doubt have many meetings in Anderson Hall at which you will no doubt be offered drinks and the occasional snack. Hey, it's just one of those perks. Wow! A free Coke!

I must say, however, this is one of the truly great services Anderson Hall provides, save managing the school's finances, curriculum and assorted programs.

If you are literate and well-read, and I'm assuming a majority of college students aren't, you probably know after a reading by a writer or poet, a party follows. There is always food at these parties — usually good food.

Well, I don't want to dwell on food, but on many occasions I've chosen food over oxygen. (I once chased a delicious Maine lobster through a fish tank in a fancy restaurant. He was a little clumsy, but butter helped.)

The real secret for free food is the Blumont Buffet in the K-State Student Union. Forget the Stateroom, where you get the hot line special, dessert and a drink for around $5. Head to the Blumont Buffet, where for the price fix of $5, you get all you can eat of anything you want. I once had six helpings of the Union's cherry "cheesecake." Try doing that on a budget!

Anyway, I did mention you can get other neat, non-edible things for free on this campus.

I once got a T-shirt from someone because they thought I would vote for them. You can get a free staple, piece of tape, sticky note or paper clip from about any office on campus. Just think if you went to every office on campus. You wouldn't have to buy supplies for years.

You, as a sex-craving adolescent, are privy to condoms for 15 cents (which is practically free) at Lafene. I'd wager if you ran into Lafene with a red face, huffing and puffing ad nauseam and told them you needed a glass of something sweet for your diabetes, they would not turn you away. However, this is pushing the moral envelope.

The last piece of advice I dare give is not to the purveyors of free food; rather, it is directed to the cooks of free food: Use less salt. It's bad for me.

IGNORANCE EXISTS EVEN ON CAMPUS LEVEL

Editor,

I would like to comment on William Thomas Burdette's latest column, "Not that right-wing" — not in protest to anything he said, but in addition to it.

It saddens me to think that on our campus, or even near our campus, such ignorance festers, because hatred of this level comes only from ignorance. The contradictions in what these anti-Semitic/white supremacist groups believe is proof enough of their blind stupidity.

They are anti-Semitic, yet they are Christians. Was Jesus Christ not a Jew? These same people will often respond that the Jews killed Jesus Christ. Looking at the religions of the time and place, almost everyone was Jewish, so this is irrelevant and simply ignorance seeking justification.

Being Christian and anti-Semitic is as contradictory as being an outspoken member of the Ku Klux Klan and being a member of the Nation of Islam.

White supremacists are almost exclusively Christian. Yet if we look at the geographic area in which the events of the Bible took place, what race were the people of the region? Certainly not Caucasian. This statement will almost always result in a response about the pictures of Jesus in churches.

As painful as it is to admit, these images were conceived in far more discriminatory times, and now most Christians accept the strong possibility that Jesus may not have been Caucasian.

These prejudiced individuals will attempt to bend the words of the Bible to their will. But in doing so they break the meaning of the words. Prejudices are what fools use for reason. These people must be seen for what they are. Anyone who has the power to make you believe absurdities has the power to make you commit injustices.

An English historian once said, "The most certain test by which we judge whether a country is really free is the amount of security enjoyed by its minorities." I believe these words stand as true now as they ever have.

Life

After the dust settled from Operation Desert Storm

K-State researcher helps to find possible cause of Gulf War Syndrome story by L.L. Livengood

More than five years have passed since soldiers left the battles of Desert Storm, but for many of the veterans the battle, rages on.

Veterans of the war and their families began suffering from mysterious common ailments, now called Gulf War Syndrome, shortly after the war ended.

Specialist Scott Thronburg, Manhattan resident, began noticing symptoms in June or July 1991 after leaving Iraq in March.

Symptoms he said he has suffered from include tiredness, aches and pains in joints and muscles, hair loss and memory loss.

Thronburg said he found out he was not the only one suffering from these symptoms when he read an article in the Army Times.

He said the article brought to his attention that the symptoms he was suffering from might have been caused from chemicals he had been in contact with while in the Gulf War.

He said he reported the aches and pains in his knees to a doctor at Troop Medical Center. The doctor said he had heard rumors of the syndrome, but there was nothing he could do.

"He gave me Motrin for aches and pains in my knees, and for a couple of weeks I ran at my own pace," Thronburg said.

Thronburg said it was not until January 1996 that he was called in for a Gulf War Registry Physical where, among other things, blood samples, urine samples, X-rays and range-of-motion tests were administered.

The government has been slow to activate research studies into the possible causes, but Fred Oehme, K-State professor of toxicology, along with professors from Duke University Medical Center and the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas, has found evidence that the chemicals the veterans came in contact with may be the cause of their symptoms.

The research shows that, when combined, two pesticides and an anti-nerve gas agent widely used by Desert Storm soldiers produced many of the same neurological defects in chickens as those reported by stricken Desert Storm veterans.

The soldiers used the pesticides to protect themselves from the various desert insects and diseases they could carry.

Thronburg said he used the pesticides whenever he came into contact with the insects as well as sprayed his blankets and clothes.

The soldiers used anti-nerve gas agents often, sometimes as much as two or three times a day, Thronburg said.

"They made us take a non-persistent nerve agent to have the chemical in our blood stream so in the case that we came into contact with an active nerve agent in a combat situation, the chemicals that were in our blood stream, along with the Atropine injec-tors that we were to take after exposure to the chemical agent, would help to neutralize the active agent and clean our bloodstream," Thronburg said.

The research shows that these chemicals, used simultaneously to protect soldiers from insect-borne diseases and nerve-gas poisoning, are highly toxic to the central nervous system.

When exposed to each of the chemicals separately, the chickens had no reaction, but when any two chemicals were combined, the chickens showed similar symptoms to Gulf War veterans, including diarrhea, weight loss, shortness of breath, stumbling and tremors.

Oehme said that the chemicals can also have an effect on the nervous system, affecting memory and reasoning.

Thronburg said he had suffered from some of the same symptoms such as slight weight loss, shortness of breath, tremors, memory loss and difficulty in reasoning after returning from Desert Storm.

"Halfway through a sentence I can't come up with the simple word I'm looking for, even though I can picture it in my mind," Thronburg said.

Oehme said he had originally begun research using pigs, but when he joined the three-person research team, they switched to chickens.

"Chickens were chosen primarily because chickens have been shown to be more biochemically similar to man," Oehme said.

He said the government is more likely to accept research done on chickens.

The research was presented at the annual meeting of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology on April 17 and will be published in May in the Journal of Toxicology and Environmental Health.

"If the government has an interest, they will review the published paper and decide if there's any validity to the research," Oehme said. "Hopefully they'll fund more studies in species even closer to man."

Perhaps this research will spark more study and will begin to bring answers to the veterans and their families.

"I'd like to see the government find out what the exact cause of all this stuff is and to do what they can to cure

The Fortmeyer Files

by Russell Fortmeyer

This week Shante Moore

senior in political science and 1996 Truman Scholar

Russell: What course of program do you want to pursue as a Truman Scholar?

Shante: I want to pursue an international relations with a public policy emphasis. I want to write international foreign policy for the United States. The only way I can do that is to work for the State Department or the Foreign Service.

Russell: How did you ever become interested in foreign policy?

Shante: My trips abroad with the community service program. I went to Paraguay in 1994 and to India in summer 1995. That really changed my perspective on the way we conduct foreign policy.

For instance, what really made me very interested in getting involved was my trip to India. I saw how foreign service officers and diplomats would do their job, but most of them would never leave the embassy. The embassy was their world. How can you know what's going on if the embassy is your world?

They probably have contacts or sources, but I guess I'm into activism. I'd like to get into the community and really show interest in the country.

Russell: What part of the world interests you?

Shante: Latin America, equatorial Africa, South Asia and places I've been to. I honestly believe I would be interested in any place they sent me because I like to travel.

Primarily, that was my reason for getting involved in the community service program, but after having those experiences I've expanded my interests.

Russell: Coming from a place like Kansas, where life is pretty easy, is it hard to relate to other people in places like India or Paraguay?

Shante: No, not really. My family struggles, and we still struggle. Just like farmers in Kansas and just like basic Kansas people, struggle day to day. I guess we have more, in the sense of washers and dryers. But, I know a lot of people who struggle with debt and college expenses.

It's not hard to relate if you have an open mind. The difference is you have to know about their history and you try to compare it to yours and make a critical analysis.

Russell: Is your African American heritage a constant influence in your life?

Shante: It is simply because it reinforces who I am in the sense that my family has always had the background of community service.

Russell: Have you been to Africa?

Shante: No, but I'd like to go.

Russell: How did you end up majoring in political science?

Shante: I was interested in politics. At first, I was interested in how the system worked domestically and how to manipulate it for those of us who don't know how the system works and how we can benefit from the system.

Russell: How diverse is politics in America? Is it still a practice of the East Coast?

Shante: The establishment exists because people allow it to be the establishment. We have the ability to change that if people want to become politically involved.

If you don't like something, vote. You have that power to change the country. So many people are content because we live in the U.S. And that's the difference with other countries. In Latin America and India, people are never content. If they want change, change is going to happen.

Here we are content because we have so much. You live in America; what are you worried about? There are a lot of social issues, people getting laid off, that we need to address. Just to sit back is to not do your job as a U.S. citizen.

Russell: How would you like to influence U.S. foreign policy?

Shante: I'd like to be closer to grassroots political organizations in different countries. I'd like to make myself more known to those diverse groups. I think we don't have that. We have it at the diplomatic level, but we don't have it at the rural or grassroots level. I think we could benefit from that.

Russell: How much should a foreign country intervene in other countries and cultures? How culturally sensitive do you have to be to work in the foreign service?

Shante: I would say you have to be culturally aware. Sometimes, you can get too sensitive to what the country has that your vision is skewed about what you are doing. In the foreign service, you're looking out for the country's interests. But I think you can also balance that country's needs.

Russell: How much do you study the history of other countries?

Shante: I study the history of other countries, the constitutions of other countries, everything. Basically, you need to study political history, the cultural history and the demographics. I especially study the economics. That's essentially what the foreign service offers, is to know the economic situation and how to interpret it.

Russell: What kind of experiences have you had in the community service program?

Shante: I guess I'm one of those typical American students who thinks we can change the world — you can do this and that, but you can't change the world. You can influence it.

You can make a difference, but you can't change it. It is up to those people in that country to make the changes — that's what I've learned. Your influence can be positive. When I went to Paraguay, I worked on making a cooperative market. At first, the people weren't interested in having a market because they said the government wouldn't allow them. They were pretty misinformed.

I had to make myself informed about their country so I could tell them what they could do. I arranged for different people to come out to speak to them about what they could do. Basically, I had to hustle in their country to show them they could do things if they wanted to.

I did all of that work, but I didn't get done what I wanted to do. That's the tradeoff. It's a long-term process. It challenges you.

Russell: Do you have any political ambitions?

Shante: I want to be an ambassador to a country. That's the only political aspirations I have.

Russell: What role do squirrels play in foreign policy? Is there a class offered here at K-State about this?

Shante: What do you mean by squirrels?

Russell: Just little, furry squirrels, not the human kind.

Shante: Mmmmm ... that's a hard question.

Russell: Is that the only question you can't answer?

Shante: Probably. It just caught me off-guard. That's a nice question.

Luggage too much for team owners

Teams passed on him on draft day. They were too worried about his marketing value and negative public views of him. They were too worried about audience turnout if he was playing for them. Those teams will live to regret not drafting Nebraska running back Lawrence Phillips.

Phillips was obviously the best player in the draft. But because of an off-field incident, he was passed on by teams.

Before the draft, teams spent endless hours investigating his background. They talked to old coaches, teammates and friends about his behavior all the way back to the eighth grade.

I say teams spent too much time investigating the history of Lawrence Phillips. They should have spent more time figuring out how to get in position to draft him.

Myview

SHANE
McCormick

I'm the first to admit that what Phillips did was wrong. It shouldn't have happened. He should have been smarter.

But that was the past. Everyone makes mistakes, and they pay for them. I'm a firm believer in second chances. It seems like everyone is afraid to give Phillips his second chance.

Phillips said he is willing to do anything that is asked of him off the field. He said he is willing to agree on counseling or whatever the Rams ask of him in their contract. He seems genuinely sorry for his actions and wants to make up for them.

He said he wants to take some of the money from his new contract and build a boys' home. Who knows? Maybe in the future he could help prevent domestic abuse by giving talks around the country. Who knows?

What I do know is he is doing and saying the things he should be. It doesn't appear he's trying to be deceptive in his actions, either. I feel he really wants to overcome this problem.

And he wants to prove himself on the field. He wants to show those other teams they should have drafted him.

The Jets can make any excuses they want to, but the fact is they didn't draft Phillips because of the incident. KeyShawn Johnson is a great wide receiver, but you don't build a team around a wide receiver. You build it around a franchise running back.

That's what Phillips will be, a franchise player who will have an effect. You don't need to go far around the league to hear praise of Phillips' ability.

"As far as ability, if you take away other things, he's a great back, probably the best player in the draft," said Chargers general manager Bobby Beathard.

"If he had a clean slate, I don't think there is any question he is the No. 1 pick in the draft," said new Tampa Bay coach Tony Dungy.

So give Phillips his second chance and his clean slate.

Phillips is a tremendous running back. He contains some rare qualities. He's big, powerful and very quick. He hits the hole faster than any collegiate back I've seen in a while. He is also a tremendous receiver out of the backfield. He has all the goods.

If Phillips has no further problems, a 30-day jail sentence will be dropped when his probation ends Nov. 29. I really don't see Phillips having any problems.

He will be going into a safe environment in St. Louis. The city and press will be a lot easier than they would be in New York.

Plus, Phillips will be reunited with former Cornhuskers Toby Wright and Zach Wiegart. This will be a tremendous aid to Phillips, especially at the beginning.

Coming into an environment with some familiar faces around him that will support him is just what he needs.

He might not be the best in front of the camera right away. But how many rookies are? Just like any other rookie, give Phillips some time, and he'll show you how much he can mature.

It's time to stop watching Phillips under a microscope and start watching the results on the playing field.

Scott Poepard, second baseman, shakes hands with center fielder Adam Green during a Missouri game earlier this season at Frank Myers Field. K-State faces Kansas at 7 tonight at Frank Myers Field. Kansas leads the series by a margin of 137-127-1, but K-State won three of the last five games.

Pitching still a concern

John Berggren
staff writer

It seems every time K-State wins a ball game, it is because of its pitching.

That's no surprise to K-State baseball coach Mike Clark, who, in an earlier edition of the Collegian at the beginning of the season, said, "The key to the season is our pitching depth. If we can find a middle guy, and we can find a short guy, and David Johnson's arm continues to come back like it has and (Brian) Thompson, (Marc) Lowery, (Kevin) Wicker, (Chris) Traylor, those are some people that need to come in and have solid years for us. If they have solid years, then we're going to have a nice season. If they don't, then it's going to create some problems because pitching is so much a part of baseball."

Unfortunately for K-State, the pitching hasn't fallen through quite like Clark was wanting. The Wildcats are sporting a dismal 23-17 overall record and a 7-10 Big 8 record. And although K-State's bullpen has accounted for 10 saves this season, four more than last season's total, in nine of the Cats' 17 losses, they have either had the lead or the game tied going into the sev

Relays produce 5 1st-places

Trevor Grimm

Temperatures reminiscent of late spring at last week's Kansas Relays translated into performances reminiscent of K-State athletes of late spring.

Several first-place finishes and new personal records highlighted the Wildcats' performance at the four-day meet. K-Staters picked up five first-place finishes on Saturday, the final day meet.

K-State coach Cliff Rovelto said the success K-State found in Lawrence did not come as a surprise to him.

"Given what that meet is now, no, it doesn't surprise me that we'd have a lot of first-place finishes," Rovelto said. "But I'm really not concerned as much if we have wins as with great performances. We had a bunch of great performances, and that was important."

The success of the meet also didn't surprise freshman Renetta Seiler, who placed third in the hammer throw with a distance of 164'9".

"Once we started the outdoor season, everybody really got into track a bit more," Seiler said. "Everybody was getting tired of being inside."

Judging by last week's performances, the great outdoors seems to suit the Cats just fine.

Vanitta Kinard led the way on the women's side, with NCAA provisional qualifying distances of 42'5" in the triple

5 Cats sign with pro teams

Dan Lowerenz
contributing writer

When the 1996 NFL Draft was completed, only one Wildcat name had been called. But linebacker Percell Gaskins will not be the only Cat playing the role of rookie in pro-training camps this summer.

As of Monday evening, four K-Staters signed as free agents with NFL teams: defensive tackle Tim Colston with the Buffalo Bills; defensive end Dirk Ochs with the Green Bay Packers; offensive lineman Chris Oltmanns with the Philadelphia Eagles, and wide receiver Mitch Running with the Houston Oilers.

Tight end Brian Lojka was still talking with several teams.

Players not selected in the draft can negotiate with any team for an opportunity to play as a free agent.

"Basically what happens is they call you and offer you a chance to come to their camp," Running said. "You sign a contract and all, but you're not going to get the money that the draftees get."

The draft offers a degree of certainty, while free agency allows the players find the best environment for them.

"I still had hopes of being drafted, maybe in the fifth round, the fourth round," Running said. "But by the sixth round or so, I was expecting the free agency."

Oltmanns said he was not disappointed at being overlooked in the

No new looks for Cats' special teams

John Berggren
staff writer

Wildcat fans need not worry about K-State special teams this year, as they are one of the only facets of the football team not hurt by graduation of last year's senior class.

The biggest loss on the special teams comes in the punt-return position with the loss of return-man Mitch Running.

Running set the K-State single-season record for punt return yardage with 370 yards on 34 returns. Running's record broke Andre Coleman's record of 362 yards on 27 carries set in 1993.

Stepping into the punt return spot for this season will be the highly touted cornerback Chris Canty, who is not entirely new to the position. Canty returned two punts last year for 64 yards.

As for kickoff returners, several are expected to see action. Jimmy Dean, Mike Lawrence, Eric Hickson and Andre Anderson all return from last year's kick return squad.

Kicking-wise, the special teams again lost no one.

For the punting position, sophomore James Garcia is listed as No. 1 on the depth chart, and senior Chad Romano is listed No. 2.

Garcia averaged 41.5 yards per kick last season as a true freshman. Romano, a former starter, averages 39 yards per punt in his career.

Garcia said even though he is No. 1 on the depth chart, his job is still up for grabs.

"I didn't have too good of a year last year, and I need to prove that I'm a lot better than I played," Garcia said. "Romano is obviously back, so it's going to be basically the same as it was last year. It will just depend on who does better in two-a-days, so my job is not set in stone."

K-State finished fourth last year in punting average — a big improvement over the season before, when it finished last in the conference.

Garcia is also noted for his two passes which he completed for fourth-down conversions on fake punts. Garcia said he had experience throwing the football.

"If the situation comes up, I'd love to do it," Garcia said. "I played quarterback in high school, so it's something I'm familiar with. I don't feel any more pressure throwing the ball than I do kicking it."

In the place-kicking position, two juniors lead the way. Martin Gramatica is listed at the top position on the depth chart, and Scott Collins is listed at No. 2.

Gramatica is a two-year starter and has connected on 13 of 19 tries in his career, including going 7-10 last year.

"We didn't have many tries last year," Gramatica said. "We finished hitting 70 percent of our field goals, but we'd like to do better."

Gramatica said one of the things he wanted to accomplish for this season was to kick some long field goals.

"It's always been my goal to kick a long field goal," Gramatica said. "I had two long ones last year, and one missed barely wide, and the other just missed the upright. My main goal is to just give 100 percent. I think I have the strength to hit a long one. I just need to keep getting better."

BLOODLINES

There is less than a month in school now, the weather is wonderful, and all normal students have already begun their summer vacation preparation. This week we'll look into how the web can help with trips.

Virtually Hawaii

(<http://www.satlab.hawaii.edu/space/hawaii/>)
Some will have to be content with the weekend trip to Colorado for our big summer vacation. This site will help ease the pain of not being able to go somewhere exotic. Finally, our tax dollars are being used for something useful!

This page will allow you the ability of looking at Hawaii as you want to. Surfers can just look at satellite photos of the various islands, or they can take the MPEG tours.

One of the best parts is the ability to see real-time photos. Users can see satellite shots from a variety of satellites and lenses of the island. Or you can see live photos or video of Sunset Beach.

The graphics are good, but the page can be slow at times. This is a place where every surfer needs to catch a few rays before diving back into the jungle of the web.

QuoteWatch

(<http://www.imo.com/cgi-bin/qw?exch=forex>)
For anyone getting ready to leave the country, whether they are forcing you out or you're leaving of your own free will, this is a must-see before hitting international water.

This page will give the current exchange rate for 30 of the most popular currencies in the world. It will also draw a graph to show how the cash compared to the U.S. dollar in the past day. Though I haven't found a real use for this function, it does look cool.

Rollercoasters and Other Insanities

(<http://www.coasters.net:80/Coasters/>)
For the thrillseeker in us all, this is a great page. (At least those of us who don't throw up easily.)

This is an international thrillseeker's page with coasters from North America and Europe being highlighted. The page has a very complete listing of amusement parks. What it is missing is pictures and descriptions from many amusement parks, particularly those from the Midwest.

The authors have done everything they can to make the page enjoyable. Links to other on-line sites, including the amusement parks, are provided. Roller coaster-riding clubs are listed, as well as magazines and everything else one could imagine about the rides. They have even listed various videos about roller coasters, too.

Word of the week: Telecommunications Act of 1996

What a college student actually needs to know about this document is pretty straight-forward. Because of this bill we can now have other companies competing with TCI.

Secondly, and even more importantly, this act gives the government the right to arrest people for what they say on the Internet. This section of the act is tied up in the courts currently, with almost 20 separate lawsuits against it.

Cowboys trample Cats; netters stumble to 10-6

Sports Information

The K-State women's tennis team dropped to 10-6 overall, 4-2 in the Big 8 after Oklahoma State posted an impressive 5-2 victory in Stillwater Sunday.

Oklahoma State came into the dual with a 12-7 season record after a homestand, which saw it drop a tough 4-3 decision to Kansas and then shut out Missouri 7-0.

Oklahoma State is ranked No. 50 as a team in the ITA rankings.

K-State started the dual in strong fashion, sweeping all three doubles matchups to take the doubles point.

K-State's top team of Karina Kuregian and Lena Pilipchak took a tough 9-8, 7-3 battle from Tamsin Wainwright and Martina Hautova at the No. 1 spot.

Yana Dorodnova and Karen Nicholson posted an 8-4 win over Monika Wirthova and Carolina Hadad at No. 2.

Dinah Watson and Chris Schulte completed the sweep with an 8-3 win over Kym Hazzard and Correne Stout at No. 3.

Singles was a different story for the Wildcats as they managed to win just one of the six matches.

Kuregian, playing at No. 1 singles for just the third time this spring, continued her incredible season by posting her 14th-consecutive win over Oklahoma State's Hautova, 6-4, 5-7, 6-4.

Hautova picked up a moral victory of sorts, as she became just the third player to win a set from Kuregian this spring. Kuregian is a perfect 14-0 on the season.

Dorodnova matched up with Hazzard at No. 2 singles, a player she knows quite well.

Dorodnova and Hazzard met four different times during the fall tournament season in singles and doubles, and this time Hazzard got the better end of the rivalry.

Dorodnova dropped the match to Hazzard in straight sets, 6-1, 7-5 and fell to 11-5 on the spring. Dorodnova has just one win in her last four outings.

The loss drops K-State to 10-6 on the spring, 4-2 in the Big 8. It is only the second loss for the Cats in their last nine duals, with both losses coming to ranked foes.

Oklahoma State improves to 13-7, 6-1 in the Big 8.

The team finished regular season play Monday at Oklahoma before playing in the Big 8 Tournament this weekend.

enth inning.

The bullpen was not able to finish the opponent off.

Thompson is 0-2 with a 6.27 ERA in nine appearances.

His last appearance was a three-run blasting by Oklahoma, in which he recorded no outs and ended up taking the loss in the game.

Lowery has seen eight appearances and has a 6.10 ERA.

Wicker has seen 11 appearances and has the team's highest ERA at 6.75 and a 3-2 mark.

Traylor and Johnson have been bright spots for the Cats.

Traylor, with a 4-0 record in 12 appearances, owns a 4.64 ERA.

Johnson leads the team with four saves and is second on the staff with a 4.26 ERA.

Matt Koeman leads the team's hurlers with a 4.05 ERA and has the most wins at 6-3, picking up his last win in an 8-1/3 effort against Oklahoma on Sunday.

Clark said when his pitching staff is on, his team runs smoother.

"Good pitching sure makes things easy," Clark said.

"When we swing the bats at the same time, things work out pretty good."

With two-straight wins against Oklahoma over the weekend, K-State earned its first back-to-back wins in Big 8 play this season.

Clark said he hoped the momentum would carry over into tonight's home game at 7 against Kansas.

"We've got a chance to gain some confidence," Clark said.

"The guys are going out there relaxed and are having fun and competing."

Kansas enters tonight's game 10-13 in conference play and 20-21 overall and is coming off back-to-back wins at Nebraska in 10-7 and 14-4 decisions in a doubleheader on Sunday.

K-State will start left hander Traylor against the Hawks.

Prior to Traylor's last start at Missouri, his ERA was 2.97, but he gave up the majority of runs in K-State's 16-13 loss at Missouri.

Kansas is scheduled to start right hander Josh Belovsky. Belovsky is 4-5 on the season with a 5.87 ERA.

draft.

"I kind of thought free agent from the beginning," he said, "and if the draft came through, it would be that much better."

For Oltmanns, the road to the professional ranks was a long one, starting in January.

"Right after the season, my agent contacted me and we've been working ever since. We've been having tryouts every week for various professional teams, so I've had the chance to work out for about 20 teams," Oltmanns said. "Since I didn't get invited to the combine, this was my chance to work with the teams."

By the middle of the draft, players and their agents began to actively pursue free agent deals in case they were not chosen.

"I was on the phone from about 4 to 8 Sunday afternoon talking to teams, talking to my agent — it was pretty hectic," Running said.

For Oltmanns, that work paid off Sunday evening when he received a phone call from Philadelphia.

"The Eagles called me at home (Sunday), wanted to know if I wanted to play in Philadelphia," Oltmanns said.

"They called my agent later that night, and I was with the team an hour after the draft."

Running also signed within hours after the draft and said Houston was the best match for his abilities.

"Houston was a really good match for me because they don't have quite the depth at wide receiver."

That's really what you're looking for at that stage. You just want to find a team you can make."

jump and 19-11 in the long jump. Kinard placed first in the triple jump and second in the long jump.

K-State's women's relay teams turned in solid performances, placing first in the sprint medley relay with a time of 3:52.31 and first in the 4x100-meter relay with a time of 46.33.

Wanita Dykstra, known for her strong performance in high jump, placed third in the heptathlon with 4,797 points. The event marked the first time she has competed in a multi-event competition, Rovelto said.

"She did her first multi-event. She struggled a little bit the second day but still had a decent result for the first one she's ever done," Rovelto said.

Dykstra also won the high jump with a mark of 6'1/2".

Other notable performers on the women's side included Karissa Stewart (first in the 100-meter dash, 11.80; fourth in the 200, 24.65), Susan Seymour (second in the 100, 11.97), Irma Betancourt (first in the 1500, 4:33.31) and Anna Whitham (second in javelin, personal record, 162'2").

The success wasn't limited to the women's side, however, as several K-State men turned in strong performances. Leading the way was Marshall Grayson, who had a personal record mark of 25'3/4" in the long jump.

"That's significant," Rovelto said. "He's a young kid, and he's really improved a lot over the last year from what he was doing as a freshman."

T. J. Turner's javelin mark of 210," good enough for third place, was also significant, according to Rovelto.

"He's just gradually getting back into it. That's a good mark for him," Rovelto said.

Chris May turned in a time of 4:06.23 in the mile run, which Rovelto said was impressive considering the circumstances.

"That's certainly a quality run at this point," Rovelto said. "It was fairly windy, so I definitely think he's capable of running faster than that."

Other notable men's performers included the sprint medley relay team (third, 3:21.71), the four-mile relay team (fourth, 17:29.15), and Jeff Martin (fourth in 400-meter hurdles, 53.09).

K-State returns to action Friday and Saturday when it competes at the Drake relays in Des Moines, Iowa.

News Digest

ASBURY SIGNS 6' 9" FORWARD, 3RD SCHOLARSHIP PLAYER SIGNED

K-State basketball coach Tom Asbury announced Monday that 6-foot-9 forward Pero Vasiljevic (pronounced PAIR-oh vuh-SEAL-juh-VIC) from Simi Valley High School in California has signed a letter of intent to play at K-State.

An exchange student from Adelaide, Australia, Vasiljevic averaged 25 points and 11.8 rebounds this past season as he led Simi Valley to a 17-9 record and a second-round berth in the California sectional playoffs.

He also had 78 blocked shots and 21 three-point goals and shot 53 percent from the field.

"Pero is a multi-talented and extremely versatile player who should have a significant impact on our program, probably as soon as his freshman year," Asbury said.

"He has three-point range, is an excellent passer and is just a very versatile player with a lot of skills. He can play with his back to the basket and facing the basket."

Although he played just one season at Simi Valley, Vasiljevic earned first-team all-state honors in California, was named Sectional Player of the Year by the L.A. Times and was first-team all-section by the Los Angeles Daily News.

National recruiting analyst Bob Gibbons rated Vasiljevic as one of the Top 200 high school players in the country.

"Pero is an extremely athletic 6'9" player who runs the floor very well," Simi Valley Coach Dean Bradshaw said.

"He can put the ball on the floor and get to the hole. He has the wing span of a 7'1" player, and I think he's going to be a fine player at the next level."

Bradshaw said Vasiljevic chose K-State over UCLA, Pepperdine and Gonzaga.

Hail creates problems for Kansas towns

Associated Press

LeROY — Hailstorms created headaches for scattered communities in southeast Kansas, damaging cars on dealers' lots as well as windows and roofs on buildings.

In LeRoy, hail bigger than golf balls fell during a storm lasting several minutes Sunday night.

"It just hit. We didn't have no warning or nothing," said Debra Rife, wife of the town marshal.

One insurance agent said he has more than 70 claims. He said a lot of windows were damaged and about two-thirds of the town's homes need roof repairs.

Classes were canceled Monday at LeRoy High School because the storm broke out windows in classrooms and in the shop, computer and home economics areas, Rife said.

No serious injuries were reported.

The Franklin County town of Ottawa also reported roof damage and window breakage from a Sunday evening storm. Shortly after opening Monday morning, Todd Wray, general sales manager at South Star Chrysler in Ottawa, said damage to cars on the sales lot was widespread.

individual checks totaling $40,000. Four unnamed employees told the Kansas City Star that the company reimbursed them for their contributions to Dole, the certain Republican presidential nominee.

The four employees said some workers were handed stacks of $100 bills and told to return with checks made out to "Dole for President." They reported personally receiving $5,000. Two other people claimed to know about the incident, the newspaper said.

Federal rules forbid individuals from giving more than $1,000 per election to a candidate's campaign and from donating in the name of another person. They also forbid companies from paying someone to make a contribution.

Fireman, the company's founder and chairman, has been a significant Republican fundraiser and a trade adviser to three past presidents and most recently was a director of the U.S. Export-Import Bank.

He also is chairman of the Fireman Group, a consulting firm specializing in investment and marketing of international commerce.

Aqua-Leisure distributes swimming goggles and inflatable pool toys.

The questionable campaign contributions, made last year, were reported initially in Sunday editions of the Star.

Survey reveals costs of crime in U.S.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Crime costs Americans at least $450 billion a year, according to the most comprehensive survey ever done on the price of violence, the New York Times reported.

The survey is the first to try to measure the cost of child abuse and domestic violence, along with crimes like murder, rape and robbery. It is also the first to estimate the mental health care costs and the reduced quality of life for victims of crime, the Times reported.

"The estimate of $450 billion for crime is an amazing number which tells us just how heavy a burden that crime and the fear of crime place on our society," said Rep. Charles E. Schumer of New York, the ranking Democratic member of the House Subcommittee on Crime.

"Victim Costs and Consequences: A New Look," done for the Justice Department, was sponsored by the National Institute of Justice, the research arm of the Justice Department.

It calculates the out-of-pocket costs covering items like legal fees, lost work time and the cost of police work, as well as intangibles like the affection lost for a murder victim's family. The authors devised a formula for the intangibles.

The study excludes the cost of running the nation's prisons, jails and paroles and probation systems, which would add $40 billion, bringing the total annual cost of crime to almost $500 billion, according to Justice Department statistics.

The authors of the new report made no recommendations on the best mix of measures to control crime.

► FINALS

5-day buffer prohibits tests

Kara Rogers
staff reporter

As the end of the semester approaches, many students are wishing they had more time to prepare for the finals.

Students should feel some relief from the stress of finals knowing instructors cannot give examinations five calendar days before final examinations.

This is stated in the faculty handbook, given to all faculty.

"It is a policy that has not changed since 1990. So the last exam could be given on Tuesday (May 7) and not on Wednesday, which would be five calendar days before final examinations," Suzy Auten, administrative assistant to the provost, said.

These sentiments were reiterated in a letter Provost James Coffman sent to deans and department heads.

The letter states, "provide relief for students as they prepare for final examinations and complete final projects and papers by not allowing major examinations (except weekly lab quizzes, pertinent to the provost, said."

Subway gunman loses costly lawsuit

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Twelve years after he shot four black youths on a subway train, Bernhard Goetz was ordered Tuesday to pay $43 million to the one left paralyzed by his final bullet, the one he told, "You don't look so bad, here's another."

The Bronx jury of four blacks and two Hispanics deliberated 4-1/2 hours before ruling unanimously that the white subway gunman, who was portrayed as a murderous racist during the trial, had acted recklessly and without justification in shooting Darrell Cabey, now 30.

The jury awarded Cabey

$18 million in compensatory damages and $25 million in punitive damages. Cabey had sought $50 million.

The chances of Cabey ever collecting are slight. Goetz's notoriety and legal bills have left the 48-year-old self-employed electronics expert with little money.

But Cabey's lawyer,

Ronald Kuby, said the jury's decision "sends a message to all racists with guns who think young black lives are worth nothing — they're worth a lot."

The verdict came nine years after a criminal trial in which a mostly white jury

Pro-life activists create cemetery on Union lawn

Sarah Lunday & Courtney Marshall
news editor & staff writer

Hundreds of wooden crosses stood on the north side of the K-State Student Union Tuesday.

Each of the 440 crosses symbolized 10 abortions performed in America daily, totaling an estimated 4,400 abortions.

"The point of this is to raise people's awareness of abortion issues and to get them into public discourse," said Bob Macha, junior in political science and member of KSU Students for the Right to Life.

A black sign etched with white words announced the display to be a "Cemetery of Innocents."

"It's very creepy," Vanessa Carroll, sophomore in interior architecture, said. Carroll was working in studio at Seaton Hall Monday night when she heard the KSU Students for the Right to Life planting the crosses.

"They're forcing their opinions on us, and it's not appreciated," she said.

A note from KSU Students for the Right to Life stated that the cemetery was not created as a sign of judgment, but rather as a commemoration to the lost lives.

Tiffany Pollard, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine and member of KSU Students for the Right to Life, said the crosses were simply to

In the free-speech zone, a student walks past one of 440 crosses set up by Students for the Right to Life. The crosses were planted Monday night and remained in the lawn north of the K-State Student Union until midnight Tuesday. "The crosses were put up to arouse people's awareness of the atrocity that is abortion," said Laura Ziegler, freshman in wildlife biology and organization member. Ziegler said each cross represents 10 children who die daily because of abortion.

Laramie to remain closed through April

The two-block section of Laramie Street between 14th and 16th streets will remain closed for the rest of April. The Manhattan Christian College and the city of Manhattan are testing the feasibility of permanently closing this section and enclosing the MCC campus.

Christian college studies feasibility of closing road

Bill Bontempo
staff writer

The Manhattan Christian College is conducting a test in conjunction with the city of Manhattan to determine the feasibility of permanently closing Laramie Street between 14th and 16th streets.

Patty Griswold, receptionist for MCC, said the college is hoping to enclose their campus by closing the street and constructing a courtyard, garden area to connect the two sides of the campus.

She said MCC has many reasons for wanting to enclose its campus.

"We're making a statement," Griswold said. "We believe a physical connection with the two sides of our campus will help address safety concerns, improve campus life and make our college more visible in the city of Manhattan."

340 students are enrolled at MCC, and the college also offers classes for K-State students, including theology, history and music.

MCC also offers a dual-degree program in cooperation with K-State.

The city established blockades to restrict traffic on the two blocks of Laramie Street April 15. The blockades will be up for a maximum of 30 days while city officials collect data on how closing the street will affect traffic and parking in the surrounding area.

Jerry Petty, director of community development for Manhattan, said the city has been collecting data on how the blockade has affected parking in the surrounding area, and it will begin collecting similar data concerning traffic effects Friday.

Petty said the data collected by the city will influence MCC's decision to submit an application for the rezoning of its property.

Other factors, which may also influence the college's decision, are local businesses and residents who have voiced concerns over the proposal.

Company uses campus facilities to train workers

Troy Design and Manufacturing is temporarily doing business from Seaton Hall.

"Our office space at the plant will be finished next week," Greg Vanover, TDM project manager, said. "For now we're conducting all our business out of Jim Hague's office."

Hague, associate professor of architectural engineering and construction science, said having TDM operating out of his office is not a problem.

"Because TDM has a contract with K-State's Manufacturing Learning Center, we're happy to help them out," he said.

TDM will start training its new employees at the Manufacturing Learning Center Thursday.

"We will initially be training the 11 people we hired to do the power-train conversion of the Ford Contour," Vanover said.

The Ford Contour project is scheduled to start in late May. The Ford Contour will be converted by TDM to be a bi-fuel vehicle, which will be fueled from both gasoline and compressed natural gas.

For this project TDM has hired 11 line production workers and some middle management.

"We are going to get our employees trained so they can start the conversion of the Ford Contour as soon as the vehicles arrive from the Ford Clay Como plant in Kansas City," George Gatzoulis, TDM plant manager, said.

In addition to the Ford Contour, TDM has contracts to convert Ford Rangers to electric vehicles and Ford F-series trucks to dedicated natural gas.

TDM hopes to begin producing the Ford Ranger electric vehicles in late summer, and the Ford F-series dedicated natural gas vehicles in a year.

"For the Ford Ranger conversions, we plan to hire an additional 15 to 20 people," Vanover said.

TDM does not plan to stop with conversions of bi-fuel and electric vehicles. Beginning in the fall, TDM will start its research program of alternative-fueled vehicles in coordination with K-State.

"When it gets to the electric-vehicle development and research stages, we'll definitely be looking at K-State engineers," Vanover said.

Vanover and Bob Browns, TDM quality engineer, have been impressed with the quality of the applicants.

"The quality of people we've interviewed here is astounding," Browns said. "It is difficult to pick out the very best of all the quality applicants we've had."

Friends, family mourn death, reflect on NU quarterback's life

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — For Tiffini Lake, saying goodbye to her boyfriend, Brook Berringer, was always difficult. Now he is gone, killed in a plane crash last week with her brother, Tobey.

She last saw the two of them in Kansas City, Kan., Wednesday when they stopped to visit her apartment. The 26-year-old medical school student was studying for exams.

"It was always hard to say goodbye (to Brook)," she said. "But this seemed like a special goodbye. We held each other longer. I don't know how to explain it. It was like something was telling us something was going to happen."

The next day, Berringer, 22, a former Nebraska quarterback, and Tiffini Lake's 32-year-old brother died in the crash near Lincoln.

"(Brook) was my strength through school," Tiffini Lake said. "When things were rough he was always positive. I was a big Brook fan."

Tiffini Lake said a wedding was inevitable.

"Being apart was hard, but he looked at it as though we had the rest of our lives and this was a small portion of what we're going to have," she said.

"We talked about family and where we wanted to live, how we'd raise our kids, what kind of house we wanted and things we wanted to do with our family."

Ruth Lake remembered her son as a humorous sort who always could make people laugh.

"He was a funny man; he could say things that would make you laugh until the tears came," Ruth Lake said. "Tobey inherited that from his father. When his dad died, he took over that."

Paul Lake, a railroad engineer, died in a train wreck in 1986 near Stratton, Colo., which is about 45 miles west of Goodland the hometown of Berringer and the Lakes.

Berringer's father died 15 years ago, when Brook was 7.

Tobey Lake, like Berringer, was a standout football player at Goodland High School.

He was a running back who attracted the attention of college coaches before injuring one knee as a junior and the other as a senior.

► MAN PINS RESPONSIBILITY FOR BUSINESS FIRE ON LOCAL MAFIA

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The lawyer for a man accused of burning down his business told a Jackson County jury the Mafia was responsible for setting the fire.

Opening statements were made Monday in the trial of Ross Barber, 53.

His business, R.S.B.I. Aerospace Inc., was torched Nov. 2, 1991. One of Barber's employees, Guy Tamburello, pleaded guilty in May 1994 to setting the fire and said Barber told him to do it.

But Barber's attorney, David B.B. Helfrey, said Tamburello's presence at R.S.B.I. proved that organized crime had penetrated Barber's business. Helfrey noted Tamburello is the son of Peter J. Tamburello.

"Pete Tamburello, a member of the Kansas City Mafia, essentially extorted a position for his son" in R.S.B.I., Helfrey said.

Peter Tamburello is the nephew of Nick Civella, long believed to be the head of organized crime in Kansas City in the 1960s and 1970s.

Barber had no reason to burn his airplane parts business, Helfrey said. He said R.S.B.I. had $500,000 to $800,000 a month in sales and a large inventory.

Robert Blume, opening the government's case, said Barber's business and his financial condition were in ruin.

Barber's main insurance claims of $11.7 million and $476,000 were denied, but he did receive $80,000 in payment from another policy.

He was indicted in September on six counts of conspiracy, mail fraud and money laundering.

The trial is expected to last about two weeks.

► MAN ROBS LAWRENCE BANK

LAWRENCE (AP) — An armed man held up a Lawrence bank and got away with an undetermined amount of money.

No injuries were reported in the Tuesday morning holdup of the Douglas County Bank by a man who fled on foot, Lawrence police said.

The FBI and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation were called in to help investigate.

Another Lawrence bank was held up earlier this month. It is not known whether the two robberies were related, Lawrence Police Sgt. Susan Hadl said.

► NAVY JETS CRASH; PILOTS OK

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Two Navy fighter jets were heavily damaged in a collision during a mock dogfight over the Atlantic Ocean on Tuesday, but their pilots managed to fly the battered jets safely back to their base.

The pilots escaped with just minor cuts after their FA-18A Hornets collided at about 15,000 feet, 35 miles off the North Carolina coast, Cmdr. Kevin Wensing, a Navy spokesman said.

"They both did an outstanding job of recovering their aircraft and returning," Wensing said. He declined to identify the pilots, who are assigned to a Naval Air Reserve squadron at Oceana Naval Air Station.

The high-speed collision tore the nose cone and canopy from one of the planes, painted in brown camouflage.

The other, painted in blue, lost 3 feet from the top of its left tail and five feet from its left wing tip.

Wensing said the planes, which must maintain a speed of at least 120 mph to avoid stalling, returned the 65 miles to Oceana at about 165 mph.

Investigators were trying to determine which plane initiated the collision, the second this year involving FA-18 Hornets.

► DRUG BUST ENDS IN 2 ARRESTS

WICHITA (AP) — The largest cocaine seizure in Wichita history has led to charges against two men, police said.

Chad E. Longnecker, 22, Wichita, made his first appearance in Sedgwick County District Court Monday on charges of cocaine possession with intent to sell and failing to buy a state tax stamp.

At a news conference Tuesday police displayed slightly more than 26 pounds of cocaine confiscated in a raid Friday.

A warrant was issued for the arrest of a second suspect and a third person is under investigation, said Wichita police Detective Capt. Jon Zumwalt.

The city's previous largest seizure was 12 pounds of cocaine two years ago, Zumwalt said.

He estimated the drugs confiscated Friday have a street value of $2.4 million.

► SENATE PROTECTS INSURANCE

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate unanimously passed legislation Tuesday to protect millions of workers from losing health insurance when they change or lose jobs.

Late additions also would create tax breaks for the chronically ill.

The measure now goes to a House-Senate conference committee to work out substantial differences with the House. But the rare 100-0 vote puts the full force of the Senate behind its version as negotiators begin the blending process.

One controversial Senate provision — requiring insurance companies to treat mental illness the same as physical illness — apparently will not be a problem. Senate sponsors from both parties said it would have to come out.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole worked with Finance Chairman William Roth to expand the bill with new deductions for the self-employed and for terminally or chronically ill people.

First-graders compete for $10,000 in nationwide invention competition

Chris Oakley
staff writer

Four Manhattan first-graders are competing for the chance to win $10,000 and a trip to Washington, D.C., in the Toshiba/National Science Teachers Association ExploraVision Awards Program.

Bluemont Elementary School students Erin Armendariz, Jacob Herald, Jonathan Rivers and Aliyah Stephens were chosen as one of 48 semifinalist teams in the awards program, the world's largest K-12 student science competition.

The teams were chosen from 5,300 entries, which describe students' ideas of how technology might exist 20 years in the future, Cynthia Garwick, the team's adviser, said.

The students' project, called the Five-Second Drinking Fountain, prevents long lines at school drinking fountains by automatically shutting off after five seconds of use.

"I asked the kids to identify a problem they have seen either at home or at school. It must have been hot when I asked them to do it," Garwick said.

The students decided to use the same technology used in modern stoplights, she said. Garwick said the students took a field trip to one of the stoplights in Manhattan, where they were shown how the timer for the five-second yellow light works.

"All it has is a timer that counts down five-four-three-two-one, then zero," Rivers said.

He said the project was a lot of work.

"It was sort of fun. We had to do lots of research," he said.

Herald said he was happy that the team won and would participate in the project again.

Garwick said she asked the students to participate in the project because of their advanced reading.

She said while a student teacher from K-State was teaching the rest of the class reading, she was working with the team on its project.

She said the team worked 45 minutes each day for six weeks in November and December. The team devoted recess, lunch periods and even days off for the project, she said.

"This is a bright group of kids. They have families who take time with them to read at home," Garwick said.

"They're real go-getters."

Garwick said the team won a television and VCR from Toshiba so they could record a five-minute video to be used in the final judging. The students will also receive a $100 savings bond.

The 48 semifinalist teams were each given $500 to develop a video necessary to qualify for the final round of judging.

Garwick said the team has sent in its video to be judged. Winners will be notified in late April.

Four first-place teams and eight second-place teams will each be invited to Washington, D.C., in June to an awards banquet. Each student on the four first-place teams will receive a $10,000 savings bond. Each second-place team member will receive a $5,000 savings bond.

The program is sponsored by the Toshiba Corporation and is administered by the National Science Teachers Association.

Garwick said the experience will be beneficial to the students in future endeavors.

"Now these kids will always be willing to try something new. They will never be afraid because they can say, 'We've already done this,'" Garwick said.

Garwick has been involved in the project for four years. This is the second time she has advised a team that qualified for the semifinals.

Bluemont Elementary School first-graders Erin Armendariz, Jacob Herald, Jonathan Rivers and Aliyah Stephens developed a timed drinking fountain to curb long lines. The device is an attachment to the drinking fountain that only lets one drink last five seconds.

Men sponsor campus rally against rape

Rick Druse
staff reporter

The Men Against Rape Society will sponsor a walk Thursday at 7 p.m. in front of Weber Hall.

"My feeling is campus lighting and self-defense courses are good, but they aren't going to stop rape," Paul English, KSU Student Action Team president, said.

English said the Take Back the Pride rally will tell people on campus that there are men who condemn rape. He said he wants the issue of date rape to be the biggest factor of the demonstration.

The society is a division of the Students Action Team that is sponsored by Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls.

English said the men who do not commit rapes are lumped in with the group that does, and the rally will try to convey the message that there are men who condemn rape. He said the rally will say there are men on campuses who can make a difference.

He said most rapes that happen on campuses across the country are rapes done by acquaintances.

"I do not think that men do this because they are evil-hearted. There is just miscommunication," English said.

He said the greatest potential for rapes are when parties are rocking on the weekends and alcohol is involved.

Through the rally he wants to inform men and women about date rape and what can be done to avoid the possibility.

"We want women to support the men who support this issue," English said.

He said if women do not support the men who are against rape the issue is useless.

Don't ask preference for male, female doctor

QUICKread

Lafene Health Center shouldn't ask patients whether they prefer a male or female doctor. If patients feel uncomfortable, they should be responsible enough to make the request themselves.

Going to Lafene Health Center? Better think about whether you want a female or male doctor.

Last week, a student wrote a letter to the editor about a friend who called Lafene for an appointment to get his eye examined and was asked if he would mind seeing a female doctor.

Cathie Barry, director of nursing and quality management coordinator, has written a letter (printed in the Reader's Write section of this page) explaining why Lafene has this practice. Several reasons are cited, including life experience and/or cultural orientation and people feeling reluctant to discuss the true problem with a female doctor.

The letter implies this is a policy, but it is a policy that is not consistent. Two Collegian staff members, a male and a female, called Lafene for appointments Tuesday. Neither were asked the question.

If the question is going to be asked, it should be asked of every patient who calls in.

Unfortunately, given time and resources, that is not realistic, and we do not think the question should be asked at all.

If patients feel uncomfortable, they should be responsible enough to ask the receptionist for doctors of their choice.

Lafene does not have the resources to handle the needs of everyone. The one female doctor on staff could not possibly handle all the patients who would want a female doctor.

Of course, we have not begun to touch the cultural argument regarding female professionals. Isn't there an inherent bias in the question that implies male doctors are better than female doctors?

And if we are going to break down the doctors into genders, how long is it going to be before someone comes up with a reason to separate them by race, as well?

TOLES

Putting himself on the line

I don't know what's gotten into me. Last week I was taking shots at President Clinton. Now, I think I'm about to say something positive about Sen. Bob Dole.

Myview

DAN Lewerenz

Dole, R-Kan., spends most of his time saying profoundly moronic things, like accusing Big Bird and Snuffle-Upagus of being part of a militant gay conspiracy to take over television or praising "True Lies" as a good family movie.

But this time Dole is on the mark, calling for an investigation into his own campaign for alleged fundraising violations.

In the last week, a handful of employees at Aqua-Leisure Industries, a national aquatics and sporting goods company based in Boston, have reported receiving stacks of $100 bills in return for $1,000 checks made out to the Dole for President campaign.

Complicating the matter is Simon Fireman's dual role as chairman of Aqua-Leisure and national vice president of finance for Dole's campaign.

Federal campaign laws limit contributions to $1,000 per person or business and prohibit employers from reimbursing employees for donations.

In all, $40,000 dollars has poured in from Aqua-Leisure, making the small

New England company one of Dole's largest corporate donors. Employees from the top of the executive ladder to secretaries and warehouse workers were popping off $1,000 checks left and right.

Now those same employees claim they were paid to make those contributions.

Fireman has not been named directly as a source of the cash. Rather, other executives made the transactions, saying Fireman would appreciate it if the employees would contribute.

Fireman and his attorneys have "categorically denied" these accusations.

Dole, for his part, has taken an admirable stance, calling for an investigation by the Federal Elections Commission.

"If somebody did that, they're in deep trouble," Dole said Sunday. "If somebody violated the campaign law, whether it's my campaign or Bill Clinton's or anybody else, they're going to have to suffer the consequences."

But there has to be some degree of worry in Dole's response.

The FEC fined Dole $100,000 after discovering his 1988 presidential campaign had accepted illegal contributions from an Olathe company that was reimbursing employees for contributions. The fine was the largest ever levied by the FEC at the time.

And there is no heroism on the part of the employees either. If these transactions took place, the employees could have acted at the time. None have yet released their names, fearing retribution from the management.

But most telling is the statement made by the latest employee to confess.

"I will definitely go before a grand jury," she said. "I will not go down for this."

It's not that she was pressured into doing something against her wishes or that her conscience got the best of her. This woman did something illegal, she knows she did something illegal, and she doesn't want to take the rap for it.

Dole's stance is unique because he is putting himself at risk, and there's something to be said for that. But he's still doing it for his own protection.

Everyone is looking out for No. 1, from Dole down to the donors. In this equation, you're No. 2, and you don't matter.

So look out.

LAFENE ASKS QUESTION FOR SPECIFIC REASONS

Editor,

This is in response to the April 19 letter to the editor from Alicia Muck. I would like to correct her impression about Lafene Health Center's view of female practitioners and the reason certain questions are asked of clients calling in for appointments.

First of all, Lafene employs seven physicians, one of whom is female. Additionally, there are two female nurse practitioners on staff, primarily in the Women's Clinic, although they also work in the General Clinic. We value our female practitioners and recognize their considerable skills and expertise. Our female physician is an internist, which is a specialty field of general medicine.

Many clients appreciate having female practitioners available. However, some clients are more accustomed by life experience and/or cultural orientation to having a male practitioner provide their medical care. They are not comfortable with a female practitioner regardless of the reason for their visits to Lafene.

Additionally, some clients who call in do not give us the true reasons for their visits because they are uncomfortable doing so. We understand this.

Also, they might have more than one problem, and even though they give us the reason for the visit, there might be a second issue that would be embarrassing for them to discuss with the receptionist and they would be reluctant to have managed by a female practitioner.

When we ask those few questions of clients calling in for appointments, we are trying to accommodate the clients preferences as best we can, recognizing the many issues that are involved in trying to "marry up" an appropriate provider with a client. Our female practitioners are sensitive to these issues as well and are not offended by the questions asked by staff who make appointments.

Perhaps as members of society become more comfortable with the roles of women as physicians, ministers or priests or other fields in which males have typically been the majority, we can stop asking those questions.

For the time being, we are trying to be sensitive to the preferences of our clientele and are in no way denigrating our female practitioners, whom we greatly value.

The way we, as students, express ourselves is interesting. In all actuality, it is limiting.

We may vote for a student whom we feel best represents our way of thinking, but we will never find a perfect reflection of our own beliefs. We have a free speech zone, but the only people students remember using it are the religious zealots who state anyone who has any fun is going to hell.

Even my job as a columnist doesn't begin to cover what everyone thinks. This column is my own, as well as the seven other columnists', personal vent.

However, there was a time at K-State when people who owned a can of spray paint could express themselves. I am speaking of the plywood wall that hid the early renovation of Farrell Library.

In the beginning, the only thing painted on it were a few swear words, reflecting the mentality of the same people who scratch profanity on classroom desks.

After that, though, interesting things began to happen: Artwork appeared. It was not thoughtless streaks of colored paint, but real expression. A few murals arose, illustrating meadows and bright collages of artistic expression.

Some of the art had its beginnings centered on protest. After two students were harassed by campus police for riding their bikes on the sidewalks, one witty student painted a caricature of a campus cop holding up a radar gun, dressed in a modern rendition of a Nazi uniform. For a short time, it seemed that common issues were being brought to light in a visual medium.

The University responded by covering up the fence in a thick coat of purple paint, after which the artwork began to gradually return. The revival didn't last long, though, because the University put up the current chain link fence covered in camouflage tarp.

Students need an artistic mode in which to express themselves. The only way we can see the lives of fellow students is the numerous desks on campus that have messages scratched and written on them. Even then, we only see Greek letters, who loves whom and that the mysterious spirit of Dan Gish continues to roam the halls of academia.

We need to have the wall back, or something that commemorates the existence and times of the students who attend this University. We have testaments of alumni support in the form of money, and we as students support our school in everything from football attendance to strong academics. However, we still have no way to measure the K-State personalities.

I would like to see a wall built in the Union Art Gallery. Art students, as well as any students who would like to express themselves, would be allowed to decorate it. It could remain standing for the normal time allotted an exhibit and then be taken down.

I doubt such a thing would ever be allowed to exist on the grounds of a campus on a permanent basis because many people would look at it as simple graffiti. I don't think the way we express ourselves is graffiti. I think it is just one more form of art coming from the postmodern era in which we live.

Despite the construction zones occupying areas of campus, I think we have one of the nicest campuses around. One of the things that makes it so pleasing are the people on it.

We'll leave many marks on this campus, in both a physical and intellectual manner, before we leave. I hope one of those marks will be artistic.

Enzyme offers hope for cures

Thomas Roche, a professor of the biochemistry, made a presentation on his research of the Pyruvate Dehydrogenase Complex.

PDC is a complicated multi-enzyme system involved in the control of sugar versus fat utilization. It also plays an important role in diabetes and obesity, Roche said.

"I have primarily worked on one system," Roche said.

The main interest is proteins, he said.

Roche identified the roles of components in the PDC as key antigens for development of primary biliary cirrhosis, an autoimmune disease that is a leading cause of liver replacement surgery.

"We have been able to discover diagnostics for that disease," Roche said.

He said he hopes he can contribute in finding a cure for the disease.

Roche presented slides showing how the system was broken down and studied. Glucose utilization was compared to fat utilization.

A 150-pound lean person would have 60 times more fat energy than glucose, Roche said.

It is important to understand the PDC to preserve energy, he said.

It is also important to inhibit the Kinase enzyme for the insulin-dependent diabetics, he said.

Roche has received the 1995 Conoco Distinguished Graduate Faculty Member Award for his work.

"I am honored to receive this award," Roche said.

This award has been presented to Roche in recognition of the highest attainment in his profession.

"He has hit a grand slam in his field of study," Timothy Donoghue, vice provost and dean, said.

"The K-State faculty members who receive the Conoco award are being honored for making profound and outstanding contributions to their respective fields," Donoghue said.

Roche is recognized nationally and internationally, Donoghue said.

Roche has received funding for his research from the National Institutes of Health for more than 20 years.

Roche joined K-State in 1974 and became the head of the department in 1990.

Roche has been the mentor of many undergraduate and graduate students.

He thanked his peers and students and especially his wife for helping him out during his career.

Topeka attorney announces campaign against Sam Brownback

Race for Congress heats up with addition of Democratic candidate

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Democrats seem assured of having serious candidates for at least four of the five congressional races in Kansas this year.

Topeka attorney John C. Frieden announced Monday he will seek the party's nomination to Congress in the 2nd District of eastern Kansas, ensuring that incumbent freshman Republican Rep. Sam Brownback will be challenged.

Frieden said he made his decision after touring the district last week.

"It became clear to me that people in both parties are looking for an alternative," he said.

"I want to give voters a choice," he said.

Democrats already had State Treasurer Sally Thompson lined up to contest U.S. Rep. Pat Roberts for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, who is retiring.

It has Overland Park attorney Judy Hancock poised to run for the 2nd District seat, where Rep. Jan Meyers is retiring, and former U.S. Attorney Randy Rathbun taking on incumbent Republican Todd Tiahrt in the 4th District.

Only in the 1st District of western Kansas, which is now open because

Brownback

Roberts is running for the Senate, do the Democrats lack a candidate. State Sen. Jerry Moran of Hays is the only declared Republican candidate, but Dodge City businessman Eddie Estes has indicated he might challenge Moran for the GOP nomination.

Frieden's decision gives the party a solid contender in the 2nd District, which Brownback claimed in 1994 when he defeated former Gov. John Carlin.

The district encompasses 24 counties and part of a 25th and stretches across eastern Kansas from Nebraska to Oklahoma.

It includes Manhattan, Topeka, Junction City, Atchison, Leavenworth, Iola, Chanute, Pittsburg and Parsons.

Frieden, 53, said he would file a statement of candidacy with the Federal Election Commission within the next few days, and make a formal announcement in a few weeks.

"I am a candidate for Democratic nomination to the U.S. Congress in the 2nd District of Kansas," he said in an interview.

"I will give a full statement of my reasons, and I'll answer all your questions when I make my announcement."

Frieden is best known as the lead attorney in the litigation that resulted in the military veterans of Kansas winning a $52.4 million settlement with the state over illegal taxation of their pensions.

Frieden was born in Wichita but grew up on a farm near Hardtner, a town of 270 on the Oklahoma border in Barber County.

His father, Clarence, who died three years ago, served as Barber County sheriff.

Frieden graduated from Hardtner High School in 1960 and attended Southwestern College in Winfield for one year before transferring to Northwestern State in Alva, Okla., where he earned a degree in political science in 1964 and was president of the student body.

He earned his law degree from Washburn University in 1967 and began his law career as a clerk for the late U.S. district Judge George Templar. He has practiced law in Topeka since 1969.

Could you be a sports fanatic?

You have seen them everywhere — football stadiums, baseball parks, hockey arenas and basketball coliseums. They do not exist only at the professional level. Some of the most dangerous can be found at college games nationwide. Perhaps the most volatile exist at the elementary and high school levels.

What are they? Sports fanatics.

Chances are you are one, your neighbor is one, and even your postal carrier could be one.

Even the advertisers are picking up on the ever-growing phenomena of sports fanatics.

I am sure you have seen them, at least once, if not hundreds of times.

There are the Russell athletic wear commercials (or Champions — I'm not sure which, the fanatic was much more interesting to pay attention to).

In these commercials, a crazed fan paints himself in the team colors and adorns his body with every souvenir imaginable.

Then you have the McDonald's commercials with the two guys who wait endlessly in line for Super Bowl tickets.

What is it with sports mania? This question was posed in one of my classes Tuesday, and it really started me thinking.

Why am I so involved in the ups and downs of my favorite teams? Why are there people out there in that vast world who live from baseball game to baseball game, or Saturday to Saturday for college football? Or ... well, you get the picture.

I admit, I think I might consider myself one of these people. Come on, my calendar has the baseball team's schedule printed on it in red ink the day it comes out. Call me a fanatic.

I have come up with a few ideas. They are not traditional, and they most definitely are not the only reasons.

Heck, they might not be reasons at all — except in my distorted mind. But as it is, they might help explain why people from New York to California, Tokyo to London, young and old surround themselves with sports and live and breathe by the athletes who entertain them.

■ It is an excuse to drink lots of beer.

Seriously — every sporting event sells malt beverages. Usually, they are sold at exorbitant prices. So what do fans do? They buy more. The price does not faze them, nor do the ever-present "Don't Drink and Drive" slogans plastered everywhere.

What about tailgating parties? They are everywhere. They cannot even be stopped at K-State football games, even though the police officers sure have tried. Don't believe me? Check out the alumni parking lot sometime.

I've seen a few of you recently at K-State baseball games with bottles of beer. I will not tell who because it is prohibited, but you have been spotted.

How many times have you gone to a sporting event and not consumed alcoholic beverages?

If you are a sports fanatic, the chances are that you have consumed alcoholic beverages at more than 80 percent of the athletic events you have attended.

Unless of course you were an athlete in a great many of those, and even then it would be questionable if you really were sober. Take recreational softball, for example.

■ It is an excuse to dress funny. Look at those guys at the K-State basketball games who wear referee shirts, or countless numbers of fans who paint the team letters on their chests and stand in a row to display their team pride.

Every team store has merchandise that can be bought to accentuate the traditional baseball cap, jeans and team t-shirt outfit. Now there are beanies, face tattoos, earrings, face paint, shoes, stickers and anything else I refuse to buy. See, I am not really a sports fanatic — really.

■ Cheering, ranting and raving offers the typical sports fan a pass to the fountain of eternal youth.

Most sports fanatics have had considerable experiences in their youth participating in group sports, be it basketball, baseball, football, soccer, hockey, swimming, lacrosse or whatever other sport sparks the interest of children.

Eventually, though, children grow up and the pool from which athletics can choose capable members becomes much more shallow. Injuries, lack of talent, availability of money, a choice between education and athletics and other pure and simple, and sometimes not so simple, circumstances get in the way of a child's dream to play professionally in sports.

That childhood dream still exists deep within and emerges as each event unfolds.

The man in the baseball stands shouting obscenities at the umpire might simply be rehabbing an event from his childhood where he felt a call was wrong.

But for whatever reason sports fanatics exist, one thing is certain — their love of the game.

That is one thing that will never change.

► MEN'S GOLF

Team finishes 6th in conference

Shana Newell
sports editor

The K-State men's golf team finished its Big 8 play with a sixth-place finish Tuesday at the final men's Big 8 Golf Championships at Prairie Dunes Country Club.

As a team, the Wildcats shot a final round 304 to finish nine strokes behind fifth-place Kansas.

Senior Troy Halterman shot a final round 74 to finish in seventh place.

His three-round total of 224 put him seven strokes behind Oklahoma State's Kris Cox.

Senior Scott Hovis turned in a final round 76 to finish in 17th place.

His three-day score of 231 placed him only one shot behind four other golfers who were knotted up in 13th place.

Seniors Jason Losch and Chad Myers finished only one stroke and one place apart.

Losch shot a final round 79 to finish in 30th place. Myers shot a final round of 80 to finish the tour-namment tied with two other golfers.

Junior Chad Buckridge's second-round scores were disqualified due to a mathematical error.

Coach Mark Elliott said Buckridge had signed his scorecard for a score lower than he had actually shot (82 instead of 83).

Buckridge did not notice the error until he had returned to his hotel room and brought the error to the attention of the league himself.

His second-round scores were disqualified, but Buckridge bounced back to shoot a 75 on Tuesday.

Jayhawks smother Wildcats, 24-5

It's a disgusting loss, and everybody feels it in their gut right now. We can either bounce back and have a little fire in our tail, or we can lay down and take the easy road and die.

It's never easy losing to the Kansas Jayhawks, but it's even harder when they win big.

The Wildcat baseball team found this out Tuesday night as it lost 24-5 to the Jayhawks at Frank Myers Field. It was the Cats' worst loss of the season.

"It looked like the '27 Yankees in the first three innings," Coach Mike Clark said. "Chris didn't have his good stuff. He was leaving his fast ball up, and they did a good job hitting it."

And the Jayhawks did do a good job of hitting it. Left-hander Chris Traylor started the game for the Cats and had nine hits in his term. When Traylor left the game in the fourth inning, the Cats were down 1-6.

The Cats were able to stop the pain in the fourth and fifth innings by not letting the Jayhawks score under reliever Jason Wells' shift, but the Cats didn't score, either.

"We got it stabilized, and then they had a lot of fun in the last inning on our expense," Clark said.

In the ninth inning with the score already a stinging 12-5, the Hawks went on a 12-0 run, including a grand slam home run by Kansas pinch hitter Les Walrond.

"We're embarrassed right now," Clark said. "If it's meaningful, they'll come back, and we'll compete hard tomorrow and give ourselves a chance. If it's not meaningful, then we can do headstands, and it's not going to make any difference."

It wasn't all bad for the Cats. Designated hitter David Hendrix tied the career home run record at K-State with 28 on a solo hit in the second inning.

It was little consolation for the Cats, though.

"It's a disgusting loss, and everybody feels it in their gut right now," first baseman Jason Bichelmayer said.

Last night was the start of a five-game series with the Jayhawks, and the Cats were hoping to come out strong.

"The first one builds momentum, and we wanted to come out and set the tone tonight," Bichelmayer said. "We can take this two ways. We can either bounce back and have a little fire in our tail, or we can lay down and take the easy road and die."

Clark said he was optimistic that the Cats would come back.

"We should be able to come back," Clark said.

K-State is 23-18 overall and 7-11 in conference play as Kansas improves its record 21-21 overall and 11-13 in the Big 8.

The Cats travel to Lawrence today to meet the Jayhawks again at 7 at Hoglund-Maupin Stadium. Starting pitcher for the Cats tonight is scheduled to be right-hander Mickey Blount. Blount owns a 5.87 ERA and is 0-0. Blount has pitched only relief for the Cats this season, and this will be his first start.

► SPRING FOOTBALL

New coaches don't mean new team

Shana Newell
sports editor

A 34-0 shutout of Texas Tech. A 67-0 blitzing of rival Kansas. A spectacular 27-24 defeat of defending national champions Nebraska.

These could be the headlines for K-State games approaching quickly in this, the first season of Big 12 football.

Before the team can earn those scores and accolades, it must be poked and prodded and molded into shape.

Who better to poke and prod and mold than the K-State coaching staff?

Eleven assistant coaches are led by Coach Bill Snyder.

Two of those coaches are new to the program — or at least recycled.

Defensive coordinator/secondary coach Bob Cope was the former defensive coordinator on Snyder's original staff in 1989.

Cope left the program to coach at Southern Cal before spending the last three seasons developing a top-notch defense at Baylor — a defense that finished fifth in the nation last season.

Cope said he was excited to be a part of K-State athletics again.

"I loved it when I was here. I feel very fortunate to have the opportunity to coach here again. Of all the places I've coached, it was the only place I regretted leaving," he said.

"I enjoyed working for Coach Snyder. I was very happy here." Do not expect Cope to be content with just being in Manhattan. He said while he wants to continue building a perennially winning program at K-State, he has no plans to amend the defensive scheme of the program.

"Fans will see no difference philosophically, defensively," Cope said. "A number of quality players are returning who understand the program and three coaches are returning who understand it. I'm not real smart, but I believe if it's not broke, then don't fix it."

Also joining the K-State coaching staff on a full-time basis is line-backer coach Brent Venables.

Venables was a linebacker under Snyder who has spent the last three seasons on the staff as a part-time assistant.

Snyder said both Venables and Cope have been perfect fits into his system.

"They have been extremely well received. Our coaching staff and the people in our program know them. They're not new faces," he said.

"Everyone has great respect for them both. With Brent the transition is almost a non-existent one, and it was a pretty easy one for Bobby."

Cope said even though there have been some changes in the coaching staff and on the roster, he is confident those changes will not affect the quality of the program adversely.

"I'm quite confident that we will be OK. We've lost some talented players. We've got some questions right now, and they're certainly not all answered and probably won't be by the spring game," Cope said. "But I'm confident that by the time Texas Tech rolls around, we'll have the answers."

Also looking to help Snyder find the answers will be co-defensive coordinator/defensive ends coach Mike Stoops, offensive coordinator/offensive lines coach Dana Dimel and passing game coordinator/quarterbacks coach Ron Hudson.

Cat fans will also see tight ends/offensive tackles coach Larry Kramer, defensive line coach Mo Latimore, running backs coach Mark Mangino and wide receivers coach Greg Peterson helping to lead the team.

Athletic department to charge admission

Shana Newell
sports editor

For the first time in K-State's spring football history, there will be an admission charge to the Wildcats' battle of the purple and the white.

For $3, students will be able to witness the start of the Cats' history in the Big 12 conference. They will also be contributing to something Coach Bill Snyder said he feels is much more important — Farrell Library.

"Our library touches every single student. Funding is difficult for the library because there is not library alumni," Snyder said. "Every potential donor is a graduate of a particular college; so consequently, the rights of the donations of that graduate go to that particular college."

Snyder, who is also the president of the Friends of the Library project, said the National Endowment for the Humanities has created a grant that will match any money raised for the library.

He said students should not mind paying the minimal amount to watch the game, because in the long run, they will benefit from the donation.

"I would hope the student body would get involved to help themselves," he said.

"They might be helping to buy a chair that they will sit in or a book that they would want to read."

In the past, K-State has not charged fans for admission to the spring game. Instead, it has been a donations-accepted admission.

Snyder said this price will still be at the low end of the spectrum.

"We were probably one of the only universities that hasn't charged for the spring game. Certainly, other universities charge considerably more and the highest percentage of those profits go to athletic departments," Snyder said.

"Certainly, our athletic department needs those funds, but the library is something that adds to the education of every student."

The spring football game is scheduled to start at 1:10 p.m. Saturday at Wagner Field.

Admission for students and adults is $3 while children and senior citizens can gain admittance for $2.

Additional donations will be accepted.

Good news, bad news for Kansas Wheat

Poor crops cause high prices

Associated Press

WICHITA — Stunning wheat prices are likely to remain at historic highs thanks to poor crop prospects and strong export demand, a K-State economist said.

"Unless it warms up in soft red winter wheat territory, and the condition of the crop starts to improve; unless we get widespread beneficial and almost continuous rains the next five or six weeks in hard red winter wheat territory; and unless it warms up enough to get the spring wheat crop planted in a timely manner in the U.S. and Canada, I don't see a whole lot of change," said Bill Tierney, a K-State grain marketing specialist.

Linda Hopwood, Kansas City Board of Trade marketing vice president, said there was a lot of tension in the market because of uncertainty about weather and what yield potential may remain for the crop.

"This year with reduced ending stocks, the market was indicating there was a need for a good crop this year," she said. "It doesn't look like we're going to get it. But prices are not yet high enough to scare away potential importers."

High corn prices have not curtailed export sales and the same phenomena may be at work in wheat, Tierney said. Sales bookings for new crop wheat exports are at 113 million bushels, well head of last year's 71 million bushels, which is the annual April 1 average the past 22 years, Tierney said.

Unfortunately for producers, the scarcity of wheat that is helping drive up prices also means they have little of the commodity on hand to sell.

As of March 1, U.S. wheat stocks were estimated at 826 million bushels, a 15-percent decrease from a year earlier. On-farm storage was at 224 million bushels, a 33 percent decline from 1995.

Wheat futures contracts jumped up the limit on the Kansas City and Chicago boards of trade Monday. The closing price of $6.59 was a new record for the Kansas City exchange.

Wheat for July delivery on the Chicago Board of Trade rose the limit 20 cents to $5.94 1/2 a bushel; most other contracts also gained the daily limit.

"These price levels are unprecedented," Hopwood said. "The last time we were above $6 was in 1974. The all time record high for the exchange was $6.19 in February 1974. We broke that with $6.23 a week ago."

Deteriorating crop conditions because of a lack of moisture, wind damage and freeze damage have been fueling the market. Part of Monday's sharp futures contract increases were driven by the Kansas Farm Bureau's first estimate of this year's harvest.

In a newsletter, KFB predicted the Kansas crop would total about 195 million bushels, about half a normal crop and well below last year's 320 million bushels.

Farm Bureau crop analysts are forecasting farmers in southwest and west-central Kansas will abandon as much as 60 percent of the wheat they have planted.

Next week the Wheat Quality Council will stage its annual wheat tour and produce an estimate of the crop. And on May 10, the U.S. Department of Agriculture will issue its first harvest forecast. Both estimates should help take some of the uncertainty out of the market, according to analysts.

Aphids infest, kill state harvest

Associated Press

HUTCHINSON — The Kansas wheat crop, already in trouble because of lack of rain, now is threatened by an invasion of air-blown greenbugs.

The bugs, actually green aphids, have flown into Kansas from Oklahoma and Texas with the help of southern winds.

"We are seeing a greater infestation of greenbugs than we have in a long, long time," said Mary Copenhaver of Copenhaver Aerial Spraying near Anthony.

"They (farmers) have a real tough choice. It is so dry, yet the greenbugs are so thick. Even if they kill the greenbugs, they have a slim chance of making a crop."

The aphids suck the life out of small plants and limit the growth of more mature plants.

The aphids normally are not a threat to the wheat crop this late in the growing year, but the dry weather has left the plants short enough and weak enough to be susceptible to damage.

Cool weather also apparently has slowed the movement of ladybugs, which control the aphids.

The aphids can be controlled through spraying, but the chemicals are applied by air. Monday it was too windy for aerial applicators to spray in the hard-hit areas.

Kansas wheat farmers are coming off a bad year last year when lack of rain also hurt the crop.

Some farmers had to buy wheat on the open market to satisfy futures contracts they had made.

Statewide, 58 percent of the 1996 wheat crop is in poor or very poor condition, according to Kansas Agricultural Statistics. In contrast, only 15 percent of the 1995 wheat crop was considered poor or very poor the third week of April.

Only 21 percent of the topsoil moisture is considered adequate in Kansas, and 28 percent of the subsoil has adequate moisture.

The crop is also running well behind normal for development.

These price levels are unprecedented. The last time we were above $6 was in 1974.

The electronic job search

Job hunting has found a new frontier on the World Wide Web

research & story by Laurel Hovell

Editor's note: This is the writer's opinion of the web sites mentioned in the story.

If the classifieds don't have the after-graduation job you're looking for, consider the newest and most extensive employment resource available — the World Wide Web.

The Web has hundreds of sites with information on jobs available, résumé development, career development and employers. It is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week and — most importantly — it is free.

Imagine how much it would cost to send out your résumé to hundreds of employers across the country, or thousands of employers all around the world.

What if you could make your résumé available to millions of people worldwide at no charge?

You can. Many people have personal web sites they post their résumé on, but that does not mean anyone will see it. Résumé banks offer an advantage over personal sites because they can usually guarantee someone will read your résumé.

Most résumé banks allow individuals to post their résumés at no cost, while charging potential employers for access to them.

When deciding to post your résumé on the Web, make sure you understand how it will be used.

Some services will only give out your résumé to specific employers if you give them permission. Others, not offering such privacy protection, post your résumé for general public viewing or for any member company to see.

Walk in to any computer lab on campus, sit down at any terminal and you are ready to search for a job or market yourself on a national or international level.

It is impossible to list all the resources available. Yahoo, an Internet search engine, found 635 sites related to jobs, employment or careers.

A few stand out as excellent starting points for anybody in search of employment information.

■ One place to start is a metalist (or a list of lists) of job search resources. Chances are the sites on these lists have been checked out and will be useful in your search. Some even provide detailed information about the sites in their lists.

■ Rated among the top five percent of all web sites, Job Hunt at Stanford University is an exhaustive list of career resources including résumé banks, reference materials, commercial services and university career resource centers.

It has job listing sites under specific categories for academia, general, science, engineering and medicine. It also includes classifieds from metropolitan newspapers, recruiting agencies, companies and newsgroup searches.

This site is easy to use and updated regularly. It is organized to get you to the information you want quickly and easily.

■ The Catapult on Job Web is another metalist of career resources, places to visit, resources for career practitioners, help guides and professional development opportunities. This is also a well organized and useful site.

■ The College Grad Job Hunter has listings for entry-level jobs, résumé development and posting, interviewing success and job-search tips.

It also has a keyword search engine that will search through its site. This is a great time-saver.

If you have the computer resources (software, sound card and speakers), you can listen to information on topics such as "Mastering Entry Level Job Searches in the '90s" or "Ten Tough Interview Questions & Ten Great Answers" by downloading audio clips.

■ Career Net career resource center has 1,800 links to job information, 2,000 links to educational directories, indexes and institutions, 5,000 links to employers, 1,300 links to career resource information and more than 100 Internet links, 475 business links and 225 miscellaneous information links. The site's slogan is "If it's about your career, it's here!!!"

With one of the largest collections of links on job information available, it might be right.

■ K-State Career and Employment Services has a list of Internet employment resources including metalists, job listings and employer profiles, as well as information on its own events, on-campus interviews, services and programs. This site is useful for localized information, tips on internships and graduate school information.

Using the Web in your job search has advantages over traditional methods, specifically in areas such as posting résumés, researching employers and searching for jobs in other cities.

Students can use the Web to search for jobs around the country using classifieds posted on newspaper sites such as the Chicago Tribune, the Boston Globe, the Seattle Times or even the Kansas City Star.

The Web is a good source for researching potential employers and tapping the hidden job market, said Marcia Schuley, assistant director of Career and Employment Services.

"In the course of a morning, I've taken students to Hawaii, New Orleans and Boston with the click of the mouse," Schuley said.

Schuley said only a portion of jobs are advertised. The rest are found by networking or sending résumés and letters to companies you are interested in.

■ Sites such as CityNet and CityLink (found on CareerNET) are excellent for researching companies in a geographic area, she said.

The Web has an immeasurable amount of information available on careers and employment.

The quality of that information varies, but if you take the time to search out the information you need, you might just find the perfect job.

BRITAIN'S NOT-SO-FUNNY HOME VIDEOS

The United Kingdom's Parliament is in an uproar. The British legislature is throwing a hissy fit about the popularity of "Caught in the Act," a video of some outrageous behaviors captured by security cameras. Britain has more security cameras per capita than any other country, so the hours and hours of video tape out there are being marketed.

The tape includes footage of completely unaware people trying on clothing in department stores, robberies being committed, and, of course, couples getting a groove on in exotic, risky places.

Sales are expected to reach around 200,000 copies and a sequel, "Really Caught in the Act," is already in the works.

This kind of thing makes you wonder if there are any security cameras in Overlook Park or out near Tuttle Creek Dam. Equipped with nightscopes, those cameras could put together hours of amateur X-rated footage.

SOMEBODY SHOULD HAVE BOUGHT THEM A SEGA GENESIS FOR CHRISTMAS

This guy needs to get his stories straight.

First, he said he had never even touched a bomb.

But in the London Sunday Times, alleged Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh said he and alleged co-conspirator Terry Nichols, had indeed experimented with making and detonating bombs, but only as part of a game.

Hmm, and what was that game called? Let's Blow Up the Federal Building in Oklahoma City, perhaps?

SCOTT ALLEN Miller

AND SPEAKING OF OKLAHOMA CITY...

During President Clinton's visit to Oklahoma City a few weeks ago, Joe Craig Fancher allegedly drove onto the closed-off highway and attempted to join Clinton's motorcade.

Not surprisingly, he was pulled over and charged with driving under the influence, interrupting a motorcade and possession of marijuana.

The poor guy is probably being railroaded on the marijuana charge.

I'll bet he was just trying to make good on the delivery of the stash that Bong-Hit Bill had bought from him by trying to drive up next to his limo and handing it to him, like in those Grey Poupon commercials.

A man cannot even do an honest day's drug dealing with the president any more.

THIS WEEK'S STUPID INTERNET NEWSGROUP (S.I.N.)

(alt.guinea.pig.conspiracy)

Yeah, it is true. Someone thinks there is some kind of a conspiracy out there about guinea pigs. Or is it cavies?

People who subscribe to this newsgroup argue about whether to call them guinea pigs or cavies.

After all, they did not come from Guinea, a region in west Africa, but rather from the region of Guyana in South America. So who is right?

Who the hell cares?

Rush provides new members for fraternities

■ Rush parties woo prospective pledges for K-State's 25 fraternities

Jessica White
staff reporter

Paintball, football games, barbecues and canoe trips sound like events at a summer camp, but they are activities fraternity members have been doing as a part of Rush.

Rush is when greek houses recruit new members, and it is in full swing for the fraternities. The first day to sign a high school senior for membership next fall is May 18.

Men who are interested in joining a fraternity can either talk to fraternity members or fill out a card and send it to the Intrafraternity Council. This information is then sent to the individual fraternities.

"There may be a little bit more emphasis on guys that we know through other guys in the house, but the bio sheets also help a lot," said Jon Freeman, sophomore in pre-med and Rush chairman for Alpha Tau Omega. "We've met a lot of guys through the bio sheets, especially for the spring semester."

Steve Weatherman, senior in marketing and management and recruitment chairman of Delta Chi, said often fraternity members talk to people they think would make good members.

"If a guy in a fraternity has an interest in wanting to make you a brother in that fraternity, they'll come up to you, and they'll talk to you about the fraternity," he said.

After that, prospective members are invited to Rush events.

"We have brotherhood events where we get all the guys in the fraternity together just to have a good time," Weatherman said. "We like to invite potential members to those so they can see how we interact with each other and how close we are."

Some of the rules fraternities must follow include not having alcohol at formal or informal Rush parties, not signing high school seniors before May 18 and referring to other fraternities in a positive way.

"You can't badmouth any of the other fraternities," Freeman said. "It's called dirty Rush."

Fraternity Rush is very unstructured compared to sorority Rush.

For sorority Rush, women attend structured parties and are able to meet several women at each house. Then the sororities invite women back, and the women are only allowed to accept a certain number of invitations.

Eventually, the number of parties is narrowed down. Sororities and rushes rank who they want, and women are invited to join a house. All of this takes place within a matter of days right before fee payment in the fall.

Freeman said he was happy with the fraternity rush system because they were able to get to know the guys before they signed them.

"We try to get a lot of diversity and try not to get people from all one area. We look for well-roundedness, sincerity in the guys and energetic people who are going to contribute a lot to the house," he said.

Freeman said Rush is very important for a fraternity.

"It's a lot of pressure. Everybody knows if you didn't do your job," he said. "The future of the house really rides on a good Rush program."

University women honor 2 faculty leaders for service

Sara Edwards
staff writer

The University Women's Caucus conducted a reception Monday night to honor the recipients of the third-annual Bonnie Nelson Leadership Award.

Anne Butler, director of the women's studies program, and Judy Davis, director of the Women's Center, were co-recipients of the award.

Sharon Morrow, director of University Publications and chair of the University Women's Caucus, said the award is given for leadership in women's issues on campus.

Alison Wheatley, assistant professor of English and chairwoman of the selection committee, said Butler and Davis were chosen for their commitment to improve conditions for other women on campus.

She said their caring, mentoring and support for women working or studying on campus led them to be selected for the award.

"We value what each of these women has done for other women on campus in ways that are not always measurable, not always valid," Wheatley said.

Wheatley said nominations for the award are taken from all around campus. This is the first year two people have been chosen.

"We felt that both Anne and Judy had done so much for so long. Among the nominations, they stood out as such shining examples. We couldn't prioritize between them," she said.

Bonnie Nelson, associate professor in the Department of English, whom the award is named after, received the award in 1994, and Mary Lewnes Albrecht, professor in horticulture, forestry and recreation resources, won the award last year.

GOETZ

acquitted Goetz of attempted murder and convicted him of illegally possessing a gun. He served 8-1/2 months in jail.

Neither Cabey nor Goetz were in the courtroom for the verdict; Goetz reportedly took the subway home.

Goetz's lawyer, Darnay Hoffman, said he would not appeal.

Cabey's mother, Shirley, told the Associated Press in a telephone interview: "I just want people to know, the world to know, my son did not do anything to (Goetz). He was just sitting there. It wasn't a money matter. I want the world to know my son didn't do anything to that man."

In closing arguments, Kuby cited remarks Goetz made about the four youths that he wanted to kill them all and could have gouged their eyes out.

Kuby said, "It is as damning a chronicle as one could ever have. How much more proof do you need?"

His voice rising, Kuby said, "I don't care how much you award in punitive damages. Bankrupt him. Make sure he never enjoys life as a rich man. Make sure if he wins the lottery, Darrell Cabey wins the lottery."

Hoffman reminded the jury that Cabey was quoted in a 1985 newspaper interview as saying that his friends were about to rob Goetz because he "looked like easy bait."

Hoffman admitted that Goetz's own words "damned him tremendously," including his remark that Cabey's mother should have had an abortion and his reference at a community meeting in 1980 to "spics and niggers."

"He's a nerd, a geek, a peckerwood, a cracker," Hoffman said of his own client. But Goetz was not some cool, calculating racist, just a frightened man, the lawyer said.

The subway gunman case captured national attention for more than a decade, making Goetz a symbol of the nation's twin obsessions: race and crime. The National Rifle Association donated $40,000 toward Goetz's legal expenses.

Goetz shot Cabey and three other unarmed young men on Dec. 22, 1984. He later said the four were about to rob him.

The young men said they were only panhandling when they asked him for $5.

Cabey was paralyzed and suffered brain damage. He uses a wheelchair, and his family said he has the mental capacity of an 8-year-old.

Earlier this month, Goetz took the witness stand for the first time and chillingly recounted the shootings. He said "that shine" in victim Troy Canty's eyes and "that smile" made him snap.

Court papers show Goetz's annual income fell from $100,000 a year to about $20,000 in the years since the shooting, and he went through $60,000 in donations and $250,000 of his own money on legal costs.

But Kuby said last week he believed Goetz had a $100,000 inheritance now kept by relatives.

Under state law, Cabey could collect 10 percent of Goetz's earnings for the next 20 years.

who filled out the comment sheets.

Ali Downard, junior in park resource management, who lives near the blockade on Laramie Street, said there is consensus of Laramie Street residents who dislike the closed section of the street.

"It's a complete inconvenience to get to Aggieville businesses and the east side of town," Downard said.

She said she does not not like being detoured from Laramie Street, "A lot of my friends and I use it every day."

Ken Cable, MCC president, met with city commissioners and members of the Aggieville Business Association Tuesday to discuss the college's plans and open the lines of communication. Seiben said the meeting was posi-itive and merchants were able to communicate their concerns about the MCC proposal.

Safety and economic effects were the issues of most importance to merchants at the meeting.

Petty said the temporary blockade on Laramie Street will be taken down in about 10 days when all the data is collected.

If MCC submits an application for rezoning after the data is collected, Petty said the process will take months before they know if it is approved. Ultimately, the city commission will make the final decision.

While TDM has not hired a large number of people, Vanover said there is no doubt in his mind that they will have hired at least 100 people by this time next year.

"As the Manhattan plant grows and needs to put out more vehicles, we'll continue to hire workers," he said.

With the help of K-State, the city of Manhattan and Western Resources, TDM is near completion of an alternative fuel vehicle plant in Manhattan. TDM broke ground for the construction of this plant in November.

TDM is not only hiring Kansas workers, they are also bringing business to Kansas.

"We already have a couple contracts in Wichita, and we're looking to set up contracts in Manhattan," Vanover said. "For example, we'll begin looking for security services and to buy all our necessary office supplies."

serve as a reminder to the campus of the true horror of abortion.

"We're basically holding a 24-hour vigil," she said.

The vigil included a table in the free speech zone, providing students with pamphlets and fliers about the organization and abortion. Members of the KSU Students for the Right to Life had people monitoring the crosses until midnight Tuesday to protect against vandalism and protesters.

"I think it's going to be powerful for the women and men who have been affected by abortion," said Jennifer Talkington, president of KSU Students for the Right to Life and freshman in communication sciences and disorders.

Susan Burke, sophomore in architecture planning and design, said she was pro-life but did not support the display.

"It almost scares people," she said. The crosses did not seem to scare freshmen Grant Mallman, architecture, and Brad Malia, computer information sciences, as they sunned in front of them Tuesday afternoon.

"They need names," Mallman said. "It would mean more if you gave them names. It would give them personality."

Malia said the crosses simply gave him something cool to look at.

formance-base, etc.) during the last five calendar days before the final examination period begins."

Exceptions to this rule as stated in the faculty handbook are honors, problems, seminar, reports, research, laboratory, practical, language, studio and fine arts performances.

"The reason for this is that they are performance-based rather than comprehensive-based. It doesn't hinder academic instruction before finals," Auten said.

Not allowing instructors to give last unit exams five days prior to final exams is the only policy that dictates when they cannot give tests.

"Latitude is given to the instructor. They should be able to pace themselves and decide when to give an examination," Auten said.

Auten said complaints from students have been received before, and when this happens, the dean of the college is notified.

"The provost does not want to circumvent the deans. We usually call the dean of the college, notify them of the situation and ask them to advise the department that it is against policy to give an exam," Auten said.

The policy does not always provide the relief it is intended to give students to prepare for final examinations.

Having projects the week before just puts off studying for finals even later, said Jennifer Morse, senior in public health and nutrition.

"I have more things to do before finals than the week of finals," Morse said.

DEALING WITH DISEASED WHEAT

State distributes license plates

■ K-State license plates will provide money for University scholarship funds

Bill Bontempo
staff writer

K-State is the first academic institution in Kansas to have a state-sanctioned license plate with a school logo.

The 1994 Kansas state legislature approved the sale of official school license plates in efforts to help raise money for scholarship programs.

Others Kansas schools are in the planning process, but K-State began the process of executing the distribution of official school license plates Thursday.

The new tags will carry an initial cost of $45 and an annual fee of $50. They will be available to any Kansas resident who has a passenger car.

The plates will be available through county treasurers' offices throughout the state on Jan. 1, 1997.

Amy Button Renz, president of the KSU Alumni Association, said aside from paying for a small administrative fee, money generated by the sale of the license plates will go to the general academic scholarship fund.

Renz said she thinks the new license plates are a good way for Kansas residents who support K-State to show their school spirit and help students.

"This is really going to benefit students," she said.

Sue Peterson, assistant to the president for governmental relations, worked with the Alumni Association and the state legislature to help the license plate project come into existence.

Peterson said she is pleased about the plates because of what they mean to the University.

"I think it's a great thing for K-State in terms of promoting the University and enhancing scholarship funds," she said.

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said he is also happy about the possibilities the new tags present.

"I think it will be a tremendous way to build the scholarship program," Krause said.

Samples of Wylie's and Tanya Peterson's works will be on display in their bachelors of fine arts exhibit until Friday, when there will be a closing reception from 5 to 7 p.m. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Vibrant purples, yellows and whites gracing flowering trees and shrubs on campus have spilled over into the Willard Gallery's latest BFA show.

The colorful artworks are part of a BFA exhibit featuring Kathryn Wylie and Tanya Peterson, which runs through Friday.

Wylie's volleyball past is vibrantly rendered in her work "KSU Volleyball Mural," oil on canvas.

The work is a montage of her teammates in the midst of different volleyball moves.

Riley County Police arrest men on kidnapping charges

Laurel Novell

At 9:58 p.m. Tuesday, Ralph M. Cosby and Joseph L. Escocoe of 948 Grant Ave., Junction City, were taken into custody by Riley County police officers and charged with one count each of attempted kidnapping, kidnapping, aggravated robbery and unlawful use of a weapon.

They were each confined on $25,000 bond.

The victims, an 18-year-old male and a 16-year-old female, were sitting in a car at the corner of Sixth and Fremont streets when the suspects approached them and brandished a handgun.

The victims were ordered to drive away at gun point. The female victim was able to escape and notify police. The male victim was later released in the northeast part of Manhattan after he was ordered to turn over his wallet and car keys.

The car was recovered in the southeast area of Manhattan, a short distance away from where the suspects were arrested.

Neither victim was injured in the incident, and all property was recovered.

Police charge Salina man with rape, sodomy of woman

Cori Cornelison
city/government editor

A 30-year-old Salina man has been arrested and charged with one count of rape and one count of aggravated criminal sodomy in connection with the rape of a Manhattan woman April 17.

David L. James, 741 Scott St., Salina, was arrested by the Salina Police Department between 7 and 8 p.m. Tuesday and was released on $50,000 bond, said Investigator Gerald Schmidt of the Pottawatomie County sheriff's department.

The victim was sexually assaulted about 2 p.m. April 17 on the northeast side of Tuttle Creek Dam. Investigators questioned James April 17 after receiving a license plate number from a K-State geology professor who saw a suspicious car flee the area near the time of the assault.

Investigators are still looking into the possibility of James' connection with a number of sexual assaults in the Manhattan area, Schmidt said.

One victim was assaulted Feb. 21 in Linear Park.

A second victim was assaulted Oct. 22, 1995, in the River Pond Area at Tuttle Creek State Park. A third victim was assaulted in October near Keats.

Hair, blood and clothing samples were taken as forensic evidence and are being analyzed by the Kansas Bureau of Investigation.

James will appear in court at 1 p.m. on May 2 at the Pottawatomie County Courthouse in Westmoreland.

James was a member of the K-State rugby team until July 1995, Schmidt said.

Brandon Derks, president of the K-State rugby team and junior in graphic design, said James, who went by the nickname "Quick" on the playing field, played with the K-State rugby team for a while.

"Since I've played I've only seen him out there maybe twice," he said.

Michael Lindemann explains the story behind the photograph of an alleged alien autopsy during his lecture about unidentified flying objects Wednesday night in Forum Hall. Lindemann began his career as a UFO investigator while he was trying to find out information on the United States' involvement in secret weapons production.

Speaker questions existence of UFOs, government's role

Rick Druse
staff reporter

There are such things as unidentified flying objects, but the question is whether they are human UFOs or extra-terrestrial crafts.

Michael Lindemann questioned this fact in 1989 when he had questions about the building of intense military weapons.

Lindemann spoke to a full-house crowd Wednesday night at Union Program Council-sponsored lecture titled, "Human Encounters with Alien Intelligence."

"You are never going to figure what is going on with the weapons business unless you look into UFOs," Lindemann said.

After some investigation, Lindemann said he believes the government has successfully managed an UFO cover-up for more than 45 years. He has founded the Visitors Investigation Project to look further into the topic of UFOs and alien visitation on Earth.

Lindemann said the phenomena of UFOs has not been explained. Yet, there have been hundreds of documented events that have affected the lives of people that cannot be explained.

He said one way these events are being documented is through the use of photography. But he said this can be very aggravating because one cannot prove photos are true evidence.

"Photos alone may be interesting, but they do not tell us much," Lindemann said.

He said many UFOs people see in the sky are human built. Civilian aerospace experts say the military is working on a secret aircraft called the Aurora. This aircraft can supposedly accomplish feats ordinary aircraft cannot possibly exceed, but the CIA and the military deny these accusations, he said.

Lindemann said civilian aerospace professionals say the government's Black Budget, which collects more than $35 billion annually, is one way these secret aircraft projects can be financed.

Many sightings of UFOs have been reported in detail by people, and some have had physical problems after the sightings.

Lindemann said there was a case in Texas in which three people driving on a country road at night witnessed an UFO.

The object moved slowly across the sky about 60 feet above the ground and the craft stood two to three stories high. The craft was being followed by several double-bladed military style helicopters. During the night, all three of the witnesses fell ill and were diagnosed with acute radiation poisoning.

The area where they saw the UFO had mea-

► BSU KICKBALL TOURNAMENT TO CONTRIBUTE $200 SCHOLARSHIP

A $200 scholarship is at stake for students participating in the second annual Black Student Union Kickball Tournament this weekend.

Locy Smith II, sophomore in advertising, said the tournament is open to everyone on campus.

"It is a real family-like environment. Last year we had a good time. Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity Inc. won it last year. There will be music. We'll have electronic scoreboards. It'll be a good time," Smith said.

Smith said there is still time to get a team together and register. There is a $20 entry fee per team, with a maximum of 12 players.

Each team must consist of at least four males and four females. The deadline to register a team is 5 p.m. Friday in the Multicultural Student Organization office, Anderson 224.

Special arrangements can be made until the day of the game for teams that cannot make the deadline, Smith said.

The kickball tournament will be at noon Saturday at City Park.

► MIDEAST PEACE TALKS BEGIN

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — Closing a bloody chapter in history, the Palestinians' parliament-in-exile declared Wednesday it no longer sought Israel's destruction and had abandoned armed struggle.

With the vote, the Palestine National Council moved peace-making with Israel back on track even as Israeli warplanes bombed fellow Arabs in Lebanon. It gave a boost to both Yasser Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres, who had threatened to suspend peace talks if the PLO leader missed his promise to remove the offending charter sections by May 7.

The historic import of the action was clear to the Palestinian leaders, many of them former guerrillas.

"I voted for this position to give peace a chance," said Mohammed Abbas — also known by his nom-de-guerre Abul Abbas — mastermind of the 1985 Achille Lauro hijacking in which a disabled American cruise passenger was shot and killed.

"This is a message from the fighters to the world and the Israeli people that we can take a step forward toward peace."

► CONGRESS STUDIES ATF FORCE

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of federally licensed gun dealers has plummeted 35 percent during the Clinton administration, as the government has stepped up inspections and increased fees, congressional investigators reported Wednesday.

Separately, the General Accounting Office concluded that the use of force by Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents has been well in line with those of other federal law enforcement agencies.

The two audits, to be the focus of a House subcommittee hearing Thursday, were prompted by the ATF's deadly botched raid at Waco, Texas, in 1993, which roused widespread allegations of abuses by the agency.

The GAO, the investigative arm of Congress, found that ATF agents made nearly 47,000 arrests from 1990 through 1995, and had only 39 shooting incidents and 25 allegations of excessive force — an average of fewer than 10 a year.

► LEADERS ANNOUNCE ACCORD

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional leaders and White House officials announced agreement Wednesday on a huge bill financing dozens of federal agencies for the rest of the fiscal year, solving a months-long standoff that had become a political embarrassment for both parties.

Nearly seven months after fiscal 1996 began, the two sides resolved a handful of stubborn environmental disputes and prepared to push the $160 billion measure through Congress on Thursday.

"I believe the president will find it acceptable," White House chief of staff Leon Panetta told reporters after the two sides ended yet another day of closed-door bargaining.

"We believe we have agreement on remaining issues," said Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Mark Hatfield, R-Ore.

► Although Kansas wheat has not been affected, many farmers in the Southwest have experienced karnal bunt disease in their wheat crops.

Sara Edwards
staff writer

Although most countries will import Midwestern wheat that is not infected with the karnal bunt disease, farmers in Arizona and other parts of the Southwest are still battling the disease.

Karnal bunt disease was first confirmed in the United States March 8 in Arizona.

Earlier in the month, the disease was detected in 1995 seed during certification inspections, said Tom Sim, plant protection administrator with the Kansas Department of Agriculture.

Sim has been working with the United States Department of Agriculture for the past three years surveying for karnal bunt disease in the Midwest. He said karnal bunt disease has not yet been found in Kansas or other parts of our region.

Sim said the disease has probably gone undetected in Arizona for at least three years.

When the USDA began surveying for karnal bunt disease, the southwestern region of America did not want to participate in the project.

"Since we had this work for three years, we were able to demonstrate to trading partners that the Midwest was free of the disease," he said.

Most U.S. trading partners have quarantines in place against importing from countries with karnal bunt-infected wheat, but they have agreed to accept wheat from the United States that is certified free of infection. China is refusing to accept American wheat.

"Initially other countries didn't want any U.S. wheat," said Bob Bowden, extension specialist and associate professor of plant pathology, who has been following the situation. "It was a problem, even though it was just a little part of the U.S."

Bowden said one factor in trade partners accepting non-infected U.S. wheat may have been that world wheat stocks are low this year and they needed U.S. wheat exports.

"It was an interesting year to have the problem, with world wheat stocks low and the price high," he said.

Karnal bunt disease has only affected Arizona and parts of Texas, New Mexico and California.

The disease probably came from Mexico, where the disease had been detected 150 miles south of the border, although there it is not known how it got to Arizona, Bowden said.

The disease has been identified in Mexico, India, Pakistan, Afghanistan and Iraq, Bowden said.

The disease can be transmitted through seed stock or spores. Karnal bunt disease only affects wheat, and it is caused by a fungus.

Infected wheat is hard to detect in the field but is obvious after harvesting. For more information about karnal bunt disease, see USDA's karnal bunt page at (<http://www.aphis.usda.gov/oa/bunt/kbhome.html>).

It can affect parts or the entire wheat kernel. It also gives kernels a fishy smell, Bowden said.

The disease mainly affects the quality of the wheat crop, although it can also reduce the yield of the crop. It has not been found to harm humans, Bowden said.

Bowden said although the disease has caused about 2-percent long-term losses in Mexico since 1971, it is still cheaper for countries to spend the money for quarantines and inspecting wheat coming in than to deal with the losses.

Sim said because the disease is not common, people are more concerned.

He said the disease can cause up to 50 percent in production loss in bad years.

Harvey Kiser, senior agriculture economist, said he did not think the disease had made much difference in the wheat economy this year. Another reason countries do not want to import infected wheat is because the disease is harder to identify and eradicate. It is not contained by seed treatments like another form of wheat disease common to Kansas, the common bunt disease.

The USDA is having farmers in Arizona only use harvested wheat to produce flour, not seed.

Affected farms in other states are in the process of mowing down their wheat crops.

Bowden said affected wheat farmers will probably be compensated for this year, but in the future they will have to support themselves by growing crops other than wheat on the affected land.

Fields where infected wheat is found are not to be planted with wheat for five years after the disease has been detected.

Other crops that cannot be infected by the disease may be planted during the five years, Bowden said.

Sim said there are still some questions in the industry about protocols of the production of flour from infected wheat.

Sim said despite efforts to contain the disease, there is always a risk of the disease spreading to other parts of the country. He said it is too early to tell what will happen.

"Since it was found in Arizona, the USDA will initiate a nationwide karnal bunt survey," Sim said.

Sim said the survey would involve the 42 wheat-growing states, and he estimated the cost to be between $2 and $3 million.

Bowden said it is not even known if the disease could happen in the Midwest, since the environmental conditions are different here than in Arizona.

The USDA has currently set strict standards on interstate transport of wheat and combines and other equipment used to harvest and transport wheat from the affected areas.

Join men, women in rape-awareness walk

QUICKread

► At 7 tonight in front of Willard Hall, K-State men will be gathering to raise awareness of rape. We encourage all men and women to attend this event.

Traditionally, rape has not been an issue men fight against. Society has finally reached a point where men are able to talk about rape. It is no longer just a feminist or women's issue.

If men can talk about rape, they can help to take awareness of the problem one step further.

Both men and women need to do something to prevent rape.

The campus Men Against Rape Society is sponsoring a walk at 7 tonight in front of Weber Hall to raise awareness of the issue. We are happy K-State men are becoming aware they can educate men about rape. The walk is a great start, but it is not the only thing that needs to be done.

Rape is not something that can be dealt with simply by a one-time event. Go to the rally, but remember to continue speaking out against rape after tonight.

Men in fraternities and other living groups need to talk about all forms of rape, including acquaintance rape. Prevention can begin there.

In addition, do not let friends walk home alone from the bars drunk. Do not let them walk on campus alone in the dark. Offer to give them a ride home, or walk home with them. If nothing else, call the campus escort service for them.

Women should continue to be aware. Rape can happen in broad daylight. Be aware any time you are alone. Take the precautions offered above, such as not walking home alone and being aware of your surroundings.

Men, attend the rally tonight. Let people know you stand against rape.

However, women need to go also. Support the men who are against rape.

► TAKE BACK THE PRIDE TONIGHT AT K-STATE

Editor,

We can make a difference.

K-State is a great place to be. However, we still have to deal with the issues that face campuses across the nation. Student fee debates aren't a huge concern for us only. Car thefts and murders happen here as well.

Rape and sexual assault is one of those issues the people of Manhattan and K-State have to face. Last week, another sexual assault was reported. Statistics say that for every rapethat is reported, 10 never are. Those same statistics say one in four of the women who are reading this have been or will be the victim of a sexual assault by the time they leave college. However, the greatest numbers of rapes don't happen in dark alleys. Nearly half of the victims of rape are in their bedrooms when the assault takes place. Acquaintance rape, or date rape, is the kind we rarely hear about. It is the one we could do the most to prevent.

The victimization of innocents ought to stop. I think about my mother, my fiancée, my aunt, my cousins, and I shudder. I shudder because I know it is someone a lot like my brother, father, cousins and friends who has victimized these women. The victimizers have almost always been men, like me. That makes me angry.

However, I know men to be something much more than just rapists and violent warmongers. We can be as noble and gentle as anyone else. More than anything, I am ashamed to be a man, judged in the same category as those others. However, I am not like them. I want to make a difference.

Tonight the members of the KSU Student Action Team will gather with anyone else from this campus who wishes to make the same statement. At the Take Back the Night rallies on other campuses, victims of sexual assault empower themselves to literally take back the night from those who would seek to harm them.

We will gather with men who will Take Back the Pride in their lives. We will gather with the men and the women who support these men, because we need the support of all. We hope you will join us in front of Weber Hall at 7 tonight and march across the campus, making this message clear and unmistakable: "This campus is not one friendly to those who will perpetuate this crime. The men of this campus know the difference between right and wrong."

No BOOB-TUBE BABYSITTER

Sesame Street" is killing America's youth.

OK, perhaps that is a bit of an exaggeration. Big Bird is not driving by elementary schools gunning down children playing kickball at recess. However, there is definitely some concern about how healthy it is to abandon children to the care of Bert and Ernie every day.

I was talking to a friend the other day who is going to be a nanny for four children this summer.

"Won't that be a really hard job?" I asked. "I mean, taking them to the park all the time and coming up with creative things for them to do must be pretty draining."

"The park? Creative things to do?" She looked at me like I was crazy. "All I have to do is sit the little rug rats down in front of the television. They'll watch 'Sesame Street' and 'Barney' for hours. In fact, they even have tapes of the shows so they can watch them again and again."

This is a common practice among parents and babysitters around the United States, and it will lead to a nation of lazy TV addicts.

Before I start to sound like a communist, let me add this disclaimer: I have no qualms about the content of "Sesame Street." I have no off-the-wall theories that Bert and Ernie are gay, and I do not think it is bad Big Bird had an imaginary friend. In fact, I grew up watching the show just like every other ice cream-eating, red-blooded, American kid.

The problem with "Sesame Street" lies not in its content, but in the fact it gets kids hooked on television at an early age. Parents just sit kids down every day, and before long, there are some serious tantrums if the little kiddies cannot watch it.

Consider the following from an article by Ann Green in the Boston Herald in 1995:

"What PBS has accomplished is to lead parents to believe that it's OK to turn kids into steady TV viewers at an early age. It's not uncommon now to plop children down in front of 'Sesame' and 'Barney' for hours and hours, before their first birthday, because we've convinced ourselves that these shows are good for them. While the content of public television is certainly better than most commercial TV, its benefits are questionable."

Or as Neil Postman, author of "Amusing Ourselves to Death," wrote, "'Sesame Street' and its equivalents don't teach children to love learning; they teach kids to love TV."

Getting addicted to television is the real problem here, and "Sesame Street" is the gateway show for young TV addicts. Sure, it is not going to kill them, but it sure could lead to a lifetime of cathode-ray-tube-induced sloth.

Once addicted, the problems can be worse than one might think. A study done by two psychologists documented the negative effects of television. In a 1989 article in Pediatrics, Kenneth Gadow and Joyce Sprafkin claim there was a threefold increase in aggressiveness in children who only watched "Sesame Street" and "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood."

In addition to making kids aggressive and restless, television can lead to poor attention spans. Perhaps the biggest problem with getting kids addicted to television is they just quit thinking. If all their entertainment has been handed to them via the boob tube for years, they forget how to think. This trend has already manifested itself in our generation. It could be a beautiful spring day with chirping birds, and more than half of our generation is glued to the "Ricky Lake Show."

"Why is 'Sesame Street' the gateway show?" you might ask. "What about other shows like 'Barney' and 'Mister Rogers'?"

The answer is simple — 12 million children watch "Sesame Street" each week.

I am not saying "Sesame Street" is Satan's propaganda vehicle. It can be a great tool for learning and an excellent way to explain things to children. It can help them polish up their alphabet and teach them numbers. But to use it as a surrogate babysitter is simply not healthy.

Too much of anything, even Bert, Ernie and Big Bird, can still be bad.

She made housework seem fun

Erma Bombeck just headed off to that great laundry room in the sky.

She died following complications from a kidney transplant Sunday night. With her, she took the memories of a lot of people, including me.

My mom and my grandmother were both great fans of Erma Bombeck. Their refrigerators served as an ever-changing museum of Erma's work.

My grandmother liked the ones about traveling and living with teen-agers. My mom always laughed at the ones about dieting and trying to feed a family. My husband remembers her doing stand-up comedy in the late '70s.

I wanted to be raised by Erma Bombeck. I bet I would have gotten away with a lot more crap.

She recorded the Great Move to the Suburbs, what is like to achieve grandmotherhood and the experience of hitting the 30-year-marriage mark.

She made masectomies, childbirth and marriage a lot less scary for many women.

Erma was an inspiration to many people, especially those who thought they couldn't write. Dave Barry said she was the first columnist to convince people that what was happening inside their own homes was worth writing about.

I started reading Erma Bombeck at a fairly young age, probably earlier than her average reader. The cool thing about her was her columns got a lot funnier as I got older. I read them now and laugh all over again at completely different stuff.

For me, Erma falls into the same category as Bob Ross, Mr. Hooper from Sesame Street and George Burns — all are people I remember fondly from my youth and people my kids will be able to have the experience of sharing with me.

I read her columns and remember getting the paper on Sunday mornings and reading her section before reading anyone else's.

My brother and I read her books on long car trips and wondered why we, or our parents, weren't sedated out of our misery. It seemed like a good idea whose time had come, and she made it sound very practical.

Erma made laugh lines badges of honor and advocated special places in heaven for mothers of three boys.

She talked about trying to program the VCR, then trying to find the time to watch all the stuff you taped because you didn't have time to watch it in the first place.

Erma made fun of people who maintained "personal spa and fitness rooms" in their bathrooms and made fun of herself when she realized she was doing it, too.

She was the wisecracking mother in the back of the PTA meeting, and she made all the other mothers wonder if they were too uptight.

I'm going to miss Erma Bombeck. Heck, a lot of people are going to miss Erma Bombeck. She convinced many homemakers that spending a few minutes in front of a typewriter was not an unworthy endeavor.

Erma made being a homemaker and mother an American adventure.

K-State honors retiring staff

President Jon Wefald bids farewell to retiring faculty members

Portia Sisco
staff writer

Retiring faculty members from K-State gathered Wednesday to receive recognition for their service to the University.

President Jon Wefald addressed the 32 retiring members in the Union Ballroom.

"We're doing it to celebrate the many excellent things you have done for K-State," Wefald said.

All the retirees were awarded certificates, K-State pins and pens engraved with their names.

"It's a token of our sincere, deep-felt, heartfelt appreciation," Wefald said.

Many of the retirees said they will miss the University.

Robert Meisner, professor of foundations and adult education, is retiring after 27 years at K-State.

Meisner plans to travel, starting this summer with a trip to Alaska. Afterwards, he might revisit Brazil, he said.

With a daughter who graduated from K-State, Meisner still has ties to the University.

"I feel like I'll always be a part of it," Meisner said.

Mitsugi Ohno, senior glassblower in the Department of Chemistry, is also retiring this year.

"He is a skillful constructor of special glassware," Wefald said.

Ohno has glass art on display at the Smithsonian, the White House and the Imperial Palace of Japan.

"I very much enjoyed working here. I have many kinds of memories," Ohno said.

Ohno has donated some of his art to K-State for display.

De McGlashon, associate professor in the agricultural department of communications, was honored as a writer for the cooperative extension service.

McGlashon developed, edited and produced many award-winning works for extension services, Wefald said.

"I'll miss the associates. It's a friendly school," McGlashon said.

Some of the memories she will take with her are the dedication of her co-workers to K-State and the great student body, McGlashon said.

Jeanice Cress, city extension agent, was awarded a floral bouquet for 40 years at K-State. She was the retiree with the longest period of service at K-State.

"Jeanice is a true extension professor who enjoys working with people," Wefald said.

K-State features rare performance

"Ionisation" to highlight tonight's concert in All Faiths

Brent Smith
staff reporter

The K-State Percussion Ensemble will be performing the piece of music which gave all percussion ensembles its beginning at 8 tonight in All Faiths Chapel.

"Ionisation," which was composed by Edgar Varese in 1931, is the first piece written for such ensembles, said James Strain, the ensembles director and assistant professor of music at K-State.

"It's a rare performance that you don't have the opportunity to hear very often," Strain said.

The piece requires all 13 performers playing 39 different percussion instruments, he said.

Tim Starks, freshman in music education, described the piece as a sound extravaganza.

"It's an explosion of percussive sound," he said.

The concert will also feature a guest tuba performance by Wes O'Connor, graduate assistant, and a marimba piece performed by Cheryl Hadley, sophomore in music, that was arranged by Strain.

Hadley, who is Miss Hutchinson, will perform the same piece for the Miss Kansas beauty pageant next month.

This concert concludes a successful semester, which included an invitation and performance at the Kansas Music Educators Association convention.

The percussion ensemble consists of 13 music and non-music majors who spend more than three hours a week rehearsing for one credit hour.

Bryanne Wassenberg, freshman in music performance, said it is well worth the time she spends.

"I love doing it," she said.

Sports

Football — the rest is just details

It is coming. It will only be here briefly, and then it will be gone. It will return, not until Aug. 31, but it will return.

It is K-State football.

On Saturday I will be in heaven for a few short hours. K-State fans will get to see the 1996 Wildcat football team in action. I cannot wait. Granted, it will only be a scrimmage for the Cats, but it will still be football, and, more importantly, it will be K-State football. Is there anything better?

We have been waiting for this day since Dec. 30, 1995, the day after K-State beat Colorado State, 54-21, in the Holiday Bowl. Ever since then, I have been forced to watch videotapes of old games the Cats have played. Not that I have minded watching these tapes, but it is not the same as seeing the Cats live. Watching highlight videos of the former Cat teams only makes me long for the days when I can sit in the stands and cheer on my favorite team.

I am counting down the days until that glorious August day when the Cats will open to their new Big 12 Conference member, Texas Tech, at 2:30 p.m. in KSU Stadium. On that day, Cat fans will see the stadium come alive, and so will many other thousands of people, not only in KSU Stadium, but all over the country. This game will kick off the Big 12 Conference and will be shown on ABC. What a proud day for Cat fans around the world. I can almost picture the stadium full of purple now.

With the growing success of the K-State football program, tickets and seats will not be so easy to come by. That means if you are a student, you will want to be at the games early.

Why, you ask? To see the stadium literally come alive. Getting there early enables you to see the players come out for their warm-up practices. You get to see the stadium fill up with thousands of screaming Cat fans; smell the parking lot as fans tailgate and grill out; hear the music blaring through the speakers and, most importantly, see the Cats run onto the field as a whole team for the first time.

With the atmosphere KSU Stadium has to offer, it is no wonder the Cats have the sixth-best home record in the 1990s. When Coach Bill Snyder takes the field leading his Cats, there is no question who is boss. When the stadium announcer, Ivan Wilkerson, says, "K-State fans, are you ready?" and the crowd cheers as he continues, "Then let's get ready to rumble!" it makes me wonder how I ever got by without K-State football. KSU Stadium is alive.

With the home football schedule the Cats have this year, only one word comes to mind — revenge.

The Cats will play Nebraska on Oct. 5 and will be looking for revenge after suffering a 25-49 loss last season in Lincoln. The stadium will be alive when the Cats pull off the upset.

The two other home conference games for the Cats are against Oklahoma and Iowa State. No need for revenge here. The Cats beat both of those teams last year, 49-10 and 49-7, respectively.

Football is a sport that once you are hooked, there is no hope of getting unhooked. For me, not just any football game will do. It must be college football, and it must be K-State football. I do not mind watching my home state Iowa Hawkeyes play, but I would gladly take the Cats over the Hawkeyes any day. There is just a special feeling you get watching the Cats play. I am not sure if it is pride or admiration for what Snyder has accomplished.

I would venture to say it is a little bit of both.

When Saturday comes we will be getting a taste of something we have missed for 120 days and 2,880 hours — K-State football.

After Saturday, we will have to wait another 126 days until the first game of the 1996 season. Then, and only then, my little piece of heaven will come on almost every Saturday afternoon for four months.

After all, K-State football is life — the rest is just details. Minor details at that.

Wildcats vindicate loss

Shana Newell
sports editor

After a 24-5 massacre at the hands of Kansas pitcher Josh Belovsky, the K-State baseball team said it had two choices — stand up and fight or lay down and die.

It chose the former as the Wildcats silenced the Jayhawks' bats Wednesday night at Hoglund-Maupin Stadium in Lawrence.

In an 11-3 battle, the Cats clawed back from humiliation in the same way an injured cat might.

Behind the solid pitching of first-time starter Mickey Blount and the cohesive team defense, the Cats held the Hawks to seven hits.

Blount earned the win, his first, as he pitched 5-1/3 innings for the Cats before handing the reins over to reliever Brian Thompson.

Thompson, Jon Oiseth and closer David Johnson secured the victory for K-State.

The team committed only one error in the game.

While a pitcher's first start might rattle nerves, Blount said in a post-game interview he was more anxious than nervous.

"I tried to just block out the importance of the game. Once I stepped on the mound, I just tried to keep that focus," he said.

"I went in with the mindset that I was going to go nine and I was going to go nine strong."

Offensively, the Cats were able to dig into the Hawks' bullpen early as they knocked out 11 runs on 17 hits.

Kansas starter Aric Peters went only 1.1 innings to allow four runs on five hits.

K-State did the most damage to the Kansas hurlers in the second and ninth innings.

Catcher Mike Gardner, who started due to a knee injury to regular Paul Cranford, started the second with a double down the left field line. A single by centerfielder Adam Green advanced Gardner to third.

A single by shortstop Heath Schesser plated Gardner. K-State was able to score four more times in the second inning before retiring the side.

In the ninth inning, first baseman David Hendrix led off with a double to left center. After designated hitter Jason Bichelmeyer was walked, Gardner singled, scoring Hendrix.

A double by Green further increased the K-State lead as Bichelmeyer found the plate. A single by left fielder Ryan Buell scored Gardner, putting the Cats ahead 10-3.

Perhaps the biggest excitement of the game came on the second out of K-State's side of the ninth as Buell attempted to steal second. While the Hawks infield was busy chasing Buell down on the basepaths, Green stole his second base of the game — home plate.

It would seem he took it back to he dugout with him, because Kansas was unable to score any batters in the bottom of the ninth, locking up K-State's victory.

The bats were led by Bichelmeyer who went 4-of-4 from the plate with three singles and a double. Bichelmeyer scored three runs for the Cats and driving one RBI.

Green also helped give K-State its win as he went 2-of-4, knocking in two RBI. Green's two stolen bases for the Cats, moved him into 10th on the all-time K-State stolen base chart with 32 steals.

The series is tied at 1-1 as K-State improves its record to 24-18 overall, 8-11 in conference play. Kansas, which falls to 21-22 overall and 11-14 in Big 8 play, travels to Manhattan Friday for a 5 p.m. matchup at Frank Myers Field to continue the five-game battle.

The history of women's golf in the Big 8 has come to an end, and K-State found itself right in the thick of the battle as it fought to a sixth-place finish in the 1996 Big 8 women's golf championship at Glen Oaks Country Club in Des Moines, Iowa, Tuesday.

The Cats scored 345, 343 and 319 to finish out at 1,007 in the tournament.

"We were happy. Our goal for the Big 8 was to finish in the top six," said Coach Kristi Knight. "We did just that."

Leading the way was senior Trisha Hoover, who shot rounds of 81, 83 and 77 to finish tied with Iowa State's Holly Duncan for eighth overall. Hoover was named to the All-Big 8 team for her performances. She is the only K-State women's golfer to be named to the All-Big 8 team in school history.

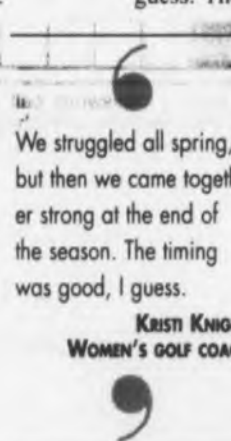

"Trisha played extremely well. I was really happy with how well she played," Knight said.

Freshman Jane Yi was the closest Wildcat to Hoover, as she finished tied for 24th with a 255 score (89, 86, 80).

Senior Richelle Bond and sophomore Ann Slater finished just one stroke apart as they battled to 29th and 30th places respectively with scores of 259 and 260.

WOMEN'S GOLF COACH

We struggled all spring, but then we came together strong at the end of the season. The timing was good, I guess.

Senior Debbie Chrystal rounded out the Cats' performers as she placed 34th with scores of 93, 90 and 80 to total 263.

Knight said she was happiest with how the team came together toward the end of the season.

"We struggled all spring, but then we came together strong at the end of the season," she said. "The timing was good, I guess. The last round of the championships was probably our best round all season."

As the team finishes out the Big 8, a new future appears on the horizon, as Texas Tech, Texas A&M, Texas and Baylor join the conference.

"A lot more competitive," Knight said about the new league. "It's going to be better for our program. Texas is ranked in the top five, Texas Tech is ranked in the top 30, and Texas A&M is ranked in the top 35."

With the changes in the conference come changes in the team.

Knight will be losing four seniors to graduation but has recruited two new players in Carrie Chambers from Elk City, Okla., and Kelly Johnston from Topeka.

"They'll bring a lot of competitiveness to our team," Knight said. "They're hard workers who have a whole lot of athletic ability."

K-STATE'S WOMEN'S CREW HAS NEW COACH

K-State Athletic Director Max Urlick announced Tuesday that Jennifer Hale has been hired as coach for the women's crew program, which will become an NCAA varsity sport at K-State this fall.

A 1985 graduate of Harvard, Hale is the rowing director of the Seattle Yacht Club and will join the K-State staff July 1.

She was the coach of the Novice Women's Rowing program from 1988 to 1992, the U.S. Junior Women's National Team in 1990 and 1991, the U.S. Junior Women's Developmental Team in 1989, at Winsor School in Boston from 1985-1988, of the Boston Rowing Center Junior Program from 1986 to 1988.

Hale was a member of the varsity crew at Harvard from 1982-1985 and was co-captain of the team during her senior season. She was also a three-time captain of the Harvard Alpine Skiing team and earned her bachelor's degree in psychology and social relations.

Following her intercollegiate career, Hale competed for the Boston Rowing Center and was invited to the Olympic Training Center in 1987 and the Olympic Selection Camp in 1988.

Season ends in roller-coaster style

Shane McCormick
contributing writer

The K-State women's tennis team had its share of ups and downs throughout the spring season.

The season started off on a low note for the Wildcats. Opening up at home, the Cats suffered a 5-2 loss to Northwestern.

The team rebounded in its second dual against Creighton, cruising to a 7-0 drumming of the Blue Jays.

At the time, Coach Steve Bietau said he saw some improvements from the team's loss against Northwestern.

"There were definitely some improvements from last week's action," he said. "I was particularly impressed with the play of our No. 2 and No. 3 doubles teams."

The Cats cruised in their next two duals, easily defeating Wichita State and Tulsa. In both duals, the Cats lost just one match.

After the Tulsa match, the Cats hit a downside and lost three matches in a row.

The first came at the hands of nationally ranked Notre Dame. The Irish got by the Cats, 5-2. Next up for the Cats was nationally ranked Purdue.

The dual was close throughout the match, but K-State eventually fell 4-3.

"The whole team was frustrated over the loss to Purdue," Bietau said after the match.

After the Purdue loss, the Cats hit a huge upside in the season. With a defeat against Utah, the Cats would start on a five-game winning streak.

After wins against Washington State and UNLV, the Cats opened their Big 8 season with a 6-1 thumping of Nebraska.

Bietau said he was pleased with the doubles play against Nebraska. "Our doubles team played some solid tennis today," he said. "They played within the range I expected them to."

After a 7-0 defeat of Iowa State, the Cats traveled to Lawrence. The Jayhawks ended the winning streak for the Cats with a 5-2 loss.

The Cats split the next four Big 8 duals with defeats against Colorado and Missouri and fell to Oklahoma State and Oklahoma.

Throughout the season, the team suffered through endless injuries. One of the biggest was the diagnosis of Graves' Disease for senior Karina Kuregian.

Kuregian said she definitely felt the effects of the disease.

"It really affected my play on the court," she said.

"I wasn't able to run a lot, because I was having a hard time catching my breath."

After being kept out of singles competition for two matches, Kuregian returned to singles play. Opponents might have wished she had not.

Kuregian would go on a roll of winning her first 14 singles matches, winning 28 of the 31 set.

Sophomore Dinah Watson suffered from severe shoulder problems, dropping her first two matches of the season.

"In the first match, I couldn't even serve overhand," Watson said. "I was serving underhand the whole match."

Like Kuregian, Watson would overcome her problem to reel off nine victories in a row.

The latest injury came at the Colorado dual. Junior Nikki Lagerstrom suffered a broken bone in her right foot, missing the remainder of the season.

The Cats finished the season over .500 in singles play except for one position.

Sophomore Yana Dorodnova finished 12-5, Kuregian was 14-1, junior Karen Nicholson was 9-8, Watson was 10-3 and sophomore Chris Schulte was 5-3.

Sophomore Lena Pilipchak was the only Cat with a losing record at 6-10.

McCain provides artistic exposure, rare opportunities

Nikki Prentice
staff reporter

The curtains are closed as the McCain Auditorium Performance Series wraps up its 25th season.

Although there were no sold-out shows at McCain this season, it was a success, Richard Martin, director of McCain, said. The 1,797-seat auditorium averaged more than 1,000 individuals per show, and Martin said there were no major disappointments.

The Shakespearean play "Henry V" was a controversial show this season because of the show's production, Martin said. It was both a favorite and a disappointment for enthusiasts.

The Cuban National Folkloric Dance Ensemble was another symbolic performance. Martin said this performance was the first time in 15 years a Cuban dance organization visited the United States.

Martin said presenting artists from cultures that students are studying is important, but also being exposed to unfamiliar cultures is substantial.

A wide range of performers has joined the McCain series. When the performance series began 25 years ago, family-oriented performances were rare, Martin said.

Pre-performance lectures were started this semester by the Friends of McCain Volunteers, a group of students and community arts enthusiasts who help heighten awareness for the McCain series in the Manhattan area. The lectures were designed to help people learn more about the performers before the show that otherwise fans may not be familiar with.

"People who come from places where these type of activities aren't available are better off to have the chance to go to these activities," he said. "This range of activities makes for a good mix in the community, and all these things contribute to a better way of life."

Even if people do not take advantage of the educational and social benefits the McCain series offers, it is important for people to know the opportunities are available, Martin said.

"Nobody in this program is trying to constrain someone to derive educational benefit out of going to the programs. It's nice if someone goes and learns something, but I think typically people are going to have a good time," he said.

The difference between McCain performances and other campus programs is that McCain imports professional performers from all over the world, whereas other theatrical shows are by K-State clubs and organizations. However, students are getting more opportunities to perform at McCain, Martin said.

"The series typically has performers not from the campus involved. There has been times where there has been students performing with some of the professionals but also students do have the opportunity to perform on this stage," Martin said. "I think that's one of the things that makes K-State different from certain other universities."

The McCain 1996-97 calendar will begin Friday, Sept. 8, with a performance by the Reduced Shakespeare Company from California, "The Bible: The Complete Word of God, Abridged." The show combines sight gags, audience participation and jokes in spoofing the so-called "greatest story ever accepted as fact."

Other programs range from Shakespearean plays to a Tibetan song and dance performance to the family musical "Pocahontas." Another attraction will be "Singing in the Rain," where rain will fall from the stage.

"People's abilities and their aptitudes should be developed in the arts, as well as other places, and I hope that when they can't perform that they would want to participate by attending something," Martin said. "I think the more they know about creating it the better they are going to be. It's just part of the education that I hope we automatically can offer."

Club sponsors pet day

QUICKread

► The Pre-Vet Club is sponsoring Adopt-a-Thon Saturday at the Manhattan Animal Shelter. Special discounts will be offered throughout the day.

Janet Blanchat
staff reporter

The Pre-Vet Club is helping to sponsor a day at the Manhattan Animal Shelter where people can adopt pets and get discounts on pet-related items.

The Adopt-a-Thon will run from noon to 5 p.m. Saturday at the animal shelter.

"We have different animal clinics and businesses that are giving special discounts for animals that are adopted that day," Renee Rankin, president of the Pre-Vet Club, said.

Rankin said the event is also a promotion for the shelter.

"We are just trying to help advertise the animal shelter and help find good homes for the animals that are there," Rankin said.

Little Apple, Konza and Blue Hills clinics will each be giving discounts, Rankin said. "The discounts for the animal clinics are 25 percent off vaccinations, heartworm tests, feline leukemia tests and for internal parasites," Rankin said.

In addition, Rankin said Animal House and Pets 'n' Stuff pet stores will be involved by offering 10 percent off supplies.

Rankin said the Pre-Vet Club is active in finding sponsors for the event.

"We organize the Adopt-a-Thon. We try to find sponsors for the discounts," Rankin said.

She said the event is beneficial. "We're doing this to place animals in good homes and to ensure good health for the animals," Rankin said.

Rankin said there have been flyers sent out and announcements made on local radio stations.

"We are trying to encourage awareness of the animal shelter. There's animals that would make great pets at the animal shelter," Rankin said.

Last year during the event, 21 animals were adopted.

"We are hoping to adopt out just as many or more this year," Rankin said.

► KSU ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Program allows alumni to stay in touch

Mikki Tice
staff reporter

When students graduate, it is hard to keep in touch with other students and faculty members. The KSU Alumni Association has the answer.

The Alumni Association recently launched a campaign to expand the K-Stater, which is a 40-52 page magazine covering campus, alumni, faculty and staff news.

"The K-Stater is an alumni magazine which has been in the University since the 1950s," Tim Lindemuth, editor of the K-Stater, said.

The magazine comes out five times a year with one summer issue.

Theodore Hopkins, professor in entomology, said he has received the K-Stater, but he would be interested in increasing former students in the magazine.

"I still keep in contact with some of my former students through meetings, sending them information, and some are still in the profession," Hopkins said. "It would be neat to hear about more of my students."

Brad Beets, Alumni Association vice president, said the Alumni Association's goal is to provide faculty and staff with an opportunity to keep updated on former students.

"The magazine reports individual news items on thousands of alumni five times a year. It's like getting a personal note about progress and updates from former students," Beets said.

Former students and faculty can find out about each other in the Classnotes section of the magazine.

"Classnotes is a way to stay in contact with former students and professors. Professors and staff can find out where students have located professionally and personally," Lindemuth said.

He said last October the K-Stater published 20 pages of Classnotes. Usually it publishes about 16 pages.

"I have worked with the University for 19 years, and I enjoy reading the Classnotes," Lindemuth said. "Since I report on campus news, it is interesting to see where students and faculty have gone."

Graduating seniors can become members of the Alumni Association and receive the magazine if they wish.

"To receive the magazine, one has to become a member of the association," Lindemuth said. "The person fills out an application and gives it to the association for processing. Then they pay $30 for an annual fee or they have several choices on three years to life membership."

Beets said individuals do not have to be graduates of K-State to become members of the Alumni Association.

"While there are many K-State employees who are graduates, we consider all faculty and staff to be integral members of the K-State family," he said.

"Membership in the Alumni Association is a natural outgrowth of their commitment and loyalty to the University."

find in a BFA show. I dare say skillful and surprisingly unique works have been the unofficial theme of the BFA shows this spring, and her work is no exception.

The painting works, thanks to Wylie's appreciation for emotion in the faces of the players. She should know; she played with them. The painting speaks the sounds of the game with its dynamic brushstroke: the grunts of a slam, the quiet flutter of a set and the breathy cry of a player trying to block.

Wylie has other work in the show, such as a series of female nude watercolors, various mixed media work and a witty piece of sculpture, but the highlight is the painting.

Wylie said her coach and teammates like the painting so much she is donating it to the volleyball team. It will be hung in the new locker room and offices in Ahearn Field House.

Most recently, Wylie created the cover art for the 1995-96 volleyball media guide at the request of her former coach.

Wylie is planning to move back to Denver, her hometown, following graduation and hopefully get a job coaching a high school volleyball team.

Taking a color cue from Henri Matisse and the fauve artists, Peterson creates colorfully animated, slightly abstract works, which pass for realism if you read the work correctly.

Peterson, fifth-year senior in pre-art therapy, art history and psychology, said her studies in art history have influenced her work the most, hence her work's fauve impression.

In "Still Life I" oil on canvas, Peterson has created a picture practically saturated in color. You have to ask yourself what color Peterson did not include.

This is, perhaps, her most abstracted work in the show. However, it really is a still life of a candleholder, a round candle, a wooden fish sculpture and a background of a tablecloth.

The painting appears abstract owing to the small-focused frame of view Peterson used. With all this color and abstraction going on, space and volume could very well be lost, but her "Still Life" has an interesting depth which creates the three-dimensional effect so vital to a still life.

"I originally wanted it to be more realistic," Peterson said. "When I try to do realism it always comes out more abstract."

To clue some of us in, Peterson has included a lithograph of what the still life looks like from farther back.

You almost wish it were not a realist painting, but you can always pretend. Peterson's reference to Matisse is reflected most in the striking pattern of the tablecloth background, a device Matisse used in numerous works. Sadly, this intelligent show closes Friday with a closing reception from 5 to 7 p.m.

Art Exhibit

An exhibit of artwork by Kathryn Wylie and Tanya Peterson is now in the Willard Gallery now through Friday. There will be a closing reception Friday 5 to 7 p.m. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Brad Beets, vice president of the Alumni Association, said the original license plate design featured a representation of Anderson Hall, but the design had to be changed to meet Department of Motor Vehicles guidelines.

Beets said the publication staff went through a long process and came up with a design that was acceptable.

The new license plates will feature the power cat logo on the left side of the plate with "K-State" printed below the logo.

The logo and numbers will be purple on a white background. Plate numbers will be issued at random and placed to the right of the the logo. Personalized tags with the power cat logo will not be available.

Brochures with details on how to obtain the license plates have been sent to 66,000 K-State alumni in Kansas.

Renz said the brochures will be made available at the purple and white football game, and they will be distributed at other Catbacker Club functions throughout the year.

Krause said the University hopes to sell many of the license plates to gain exposure for the K-State name.

"We hope on every road we travel to see many, many of these license plates," he said.

sured positive for radiation and the road had to be torn up and repaved. The witnesses filed a suit against the military, but there was not enough evidence to support that there was military involvement.

Lindemann said that one of the witnesses counted up to 23 helicopters following the UFO.

The number of helicopters were more than any base would store at one time, so Lindemann said the event had to be planned by the military in order to have so many helicopters in one area.

"We are looking at a phenomenon that impacts lives," Lindemann said. "I hope you'll agree that there is something here that needs to be explored."

ATHLETICS

Another chance?

■ Even with cocaine, sexual battery charges, linebacker might play again

Shana Newell
sports editor

Like a child at Halloween, the K-State football program has been silently hiding behind a mask — a mask that conceals more than a team that proudly boasts a No. 7 post-season ranking in 1995 and a Holiday Bowl championship.

Hidden are secrets like that of a player — on more than one occasion — incapable of abiding by the law, yet still permitted to represent K-State on the gridiron.

David Damon is the epitome of K-State's secrets.

A freshman linebacker from K-State's 1995 squad, Damon was released from the team just prior to the Wildcats' appearance in San Diego for the Holiday Bowl.

The reason?

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and Coach Bill Snyder stated simply that he violated team rules. But in a published report, Damon was reportedly suspended for failing a drug test.

And it wasn't his first encounter with drugs.

Thursday night, Clark Schafer of KSNW-TV in Wichita, televised a list of offenses Damon had incurred while living in Concord, N.C., prior to his arrival in Manhattan.

According to a criminal check by Cabarrus County, N.C., Damon was arrested March 31, 1991, for disorderly conduct and David Damon, No. 55, came to K-State in 1994 with a criminal history, including convictions of selling cocaine and possession of marijuana. Before the 1995 season, he was convicted of sexual battery of a K-State student. He has been suspended but could return in the fall.

LONDON LECTURE

Former Nixon aide to speak at Bramlage

Chris Oakley
staff writer

Former secretary of state Henry Kissinger will deliver the 106th Landon Lecture at 11 a.m. Monday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Kissinger served as secretary of state from 1973 to 1977 and played a significant role in American foreign policy. He was chief foreign policy adviser and secretary of state to presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford. He served as assistant to the president for national security affairs from 1969 to 1975.

Dale Herspring, dean of the Department of Political Science, said Nixon relied heavily on Kissinger.

"Just about everything Nixon did, Kissinger was behind him to get it done," he said.

During his tenure as secretary of state, Kissinger helped in the signing of the first strategic arms limitation agreement. Also, American troops were withdrawn from Vietnam.

In 1983, Kissinger became chairman of the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America until 1985. He also served as a member of the president's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board from 1984 to 1990.

Kissinger was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1973 for his role in negotiating a cease-fire in Vietnam. He also received the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1977 and the Medal of Liberty in 1986.

After retiring as secretary of state, Kissinger remained active as a commentator on foreign affairs, a teacher and a consultant.

He was educated at Harvard University, receiving both his master's and doctoral degrees from there.

He immigrated from Germany in 1923. He served in the U.S. Army in World War II and in the U.S. military government of Germany in 1945-46.

Kissinger has also written many books including his memoirs titled "Years of Upheaval" and "White House Years."

"One of his recent books was titled 'Diplomacy,' and he dedicated it to the members of foreign service," Herspring said.

"I was deeply touched by his decision to do that, considering the way they are treated by the Washington establishment."

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Riley County police officer James Wilkins stands next to Shelly Ricke, freshman in pre-health professions program, Thursday afternoon shortly after an accident on Todd Road. The accident involved Ricke's car and a motorcycle.

Accident leaves student in critical condition

Russell Fortmeyer
contributing writer

A K-State student was critically injured late Thursday morning after being involved in a motorcycle-car collision on east Todd Road.

Garrett Martin, post-graduate student, was driving east on his motorcycle when he collided head-on with a car driven by Shelly Ricke, freshman in pre-health professions program.

Martin was taken to the Saint Mary Hospital and was eventually air-lifted to Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center in Topeka.

He remains in critical condition.

Doctors found multiple fractures to his skull and blood clots are beginning to form, Spencer

Martin, Garrett's brother, said.

"He's hangin' in there," Spencer

Martin, senior in turf management and horticulture, said.

Inside
Manhattan has had two motorcycle accidents in the last 10 days. In both instances, neither cyclist was wearing a helmet. See story, page 5.

Garrett Martin is employed at the K-State Union Bookstore. Both of Garrett's parents and his brother were at Stormont-Vail at press time.

Ricke is a member of the Pi Beta Phi sorority house, which is at 1819 Todd Road. She was turning into the parking lot of the sorority when the accident occurred.

Officer James Wilkins of the Riley County Police Department said Martin was hit from the front.

"He was going east, and the car was going west, turning into the parking lot,"

Wilkins said.

Wilkins said Martin was not wearing a helmet.

Wilkins said Martin was conscious and talking to the paramedics before he was taken to Saint Mary.

A press release issued by the police department at 6:45 p.m. did not identify Martin or Ricke. According to the release, no charges have been filed, and the accident remains under investigation.

GARTH BROOKS

Garth Brooks arrives at K-State for concert

J. Scot Bucholz
staff writer

The stage is set and both nights sold out. Fans have expected this moment for months.

The stage is set, and both nights sold out. Fans have expected this moment for months.

Garth Brooks is here.

Within one day, two concerts were sold out at Bramlage Coliseum, and fans were left scrambling for tickets.

Those with tickets are scalpers and independent brokers who are out to make a profit.

"There's really not much we could do," Charlie Thomas, director of Bramlage, said.

Kansas does not have a law against ticket scalping, Bill Kennedy, Riley County attorney, said.

"One of the guys told us he was getting paid $20 and a pack of cigarettes for standing in line and getting his six tickets," Thomas said.

The brokers probably went through Manpower Temporary Services and paid people to stand in line to get tickets, because the tickets were only sold at Bramlage and House of Sight and Sound in Salina, Thomas said.

"They have found every individual they could and put them on a bus to wait in line for tickets," Thomas said.

Thomas said he watched a lot of people in Salina wait in line, get their wrist bands and buy tickets for us. It is the concept of putting brokers together with buyers," said John Keele, president of Tickets Unlimited and Best Sports Tour Inc.

"We're a broker. We buy and sell tickets," Mike Domek, president of VIP tours, said.

BRAMLAGE

Record sell-out excites officials, entices artists to come to K-State

J. Scot Bucholz
staff writer

Garth Brooks has set a new record for K-State with two back-to-back, sell-out concerts this weekend.

"Not in the eight years the building has been open has this happened," Charlie Thomas, director of Bramlage Coliseum, said.

There are few artists or groups around the nation who can do this, Thomas said.

Thomas said K-State officials are excited with this accomplishment for Bramlage and what it means for K-State.

"They're tickled with it," he said. "It helps the institution."

"It's fascinating," Pat Bosco, vice president of institutional advancement, said. "It is a real feather in the Bramlage management cap to not only have Garth here, but being able to sell out back-to-back concerts."

Bosco said he remembers back in the 1970s K-State had back-to-back, sell-out concerts in McCain Auditorium, and the group was Three Dog Night.

"In terms of recruitment, this kind of excitement and enthusiasm definitely helps K-State's image," he said.

But it does not have a bearing on where students choose to go to school, Bosco said.

"I think it is very positive for K-State as far as we have a critical mass in the area that can support two sold-out, back-to-back concerts," Jon Wefald, University president, said.

It shows touring artists and groups within this area that K-State and Manhattan have the potential for other touring companies, Wefald said.

This also helps Salina, Topeka and Manhattan because it shows that there is a secondary market within Kansas outside of Wichita and Kansas City, Thomas said.

"What hurts us is the numbers in the area," he said.

There is not much to do to get people out of the house, Thomas said.

Thomas said he would have to say for now it means if it is country, people will come.

"Rock did OK, but then it bottomed out, and country took off," he said. "Anything off the main line gets tough for the market in the area."

STUDENT PUBLICATIONS BOARD PROPOSES RESTRUCTURING PLANS

The Board of Student Publications had its last personnel meeting for this semester Thursday.

A brief agenda that included corporate restructuring was presented by Lin Bliss, personnel chairman of the board.

There were two proposals offered by Bliss, one proposal with a strong directorship and another with plurality.

The proposals would allow the associate director in charge of advertising, Gloria Freeland, and the assistant director advising the Royal Purple, Linda Puntney, to swap positions with the director of the board at the request of the board members.

"Why are we penalizing the director in this situation? I think it is wrong," Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc., said.

Johnson said previous records show that the staff hired is made up of good, hard-working people.

The staff of Student Publications

Inc. are qualified and are the ones who make our publications the best in the nation, Johnson said.

"I am asking to temporize what we have for summer operations, with one promotion," Bliss said.

Bliss' proposal has two associate directors reporting to the director of the board. Currently, there is one associate director, Freeland, and an assistant director, Puntney.

Johnson said a promotion must go through the director, who has better knowledge of the performance of the employees, and not someone else.

A lack of communication between the personnel board and the employees exists.

Bliss said every proposal for change is faced with antagonism.

"Lack of communication, that's why there is antagonism," Johnson said.

No attempt to communicate with people from the Collegian about the restructuring proposal was made.

Johnson said.

Mike Marlett, editor in chief of the Collegian, said communication is needed.

"We want you to listen," Marlett said.

"We do not need restructuring of everything without us being asked about how or even told about it," Marlett said.

Marlett presented the personnel board with copies of the current corporate structure.

The current structure was reviewed and compared to the proposed one.

The meeting ended with the decision to delay voting on the corporate structure of the board until Monday.

This would give board members more time to evaluate the current structure.

JURY FINDS MAN INNOCENT IN DEATH OF TOPEKA POLICE OFFICER

TOPEKA (AP) — Stephen Shively showed no emotion when he was found innocent of second-degree murder in connection with the shooting death of a Topeka police officer.

But Julie Patterson, wife of officer Tony Patterson, who was killed by a single shot during a drug raid, wept uncontrollably when Shawnee County District Judge Matthew Dowd read the verdict.

The four-man, eight-woman jury declined to convict Shively of either second-degree murder or intentional manslaughter.

Shively said nothing as he was led from the courtroom.

He was found guilty of five drug charges stemming from the Oct. 12, 1995, raid on his apartment in west-central Topeka. He also was found guilty of aggravated assault.

He originally was charged with capital murder.

But the jury apparently agreed with a defense contention that Shively, 34, was defending his house against unknown intruders when he fired the fatal shot that killed police officer Tony Patterson, 31.

Five police officers, armed with a search warrant, were breaking down Shively's door with a battering ram about 3 a.m. when he fired one pistol round through the door, killing Patterson, father of two children.

COMMERCE DEPARTMENT DETERMINES PER CAPITA INCOMES FOR '95

WASHINGTON (AP) — California is back. After five years of economic weakness, personal incomes in America's most populous state shot up 6 percent in 1995, putting it in the top 10 for income growth along with four other Western states.

At the other end of the scale,

South Dakota and North Dakota ranked dead last. Because of a precipitous drop in farm incomes, per capita incomes actually fell by 0.3 percent in South Dakota and rose a barely perceptible 0.3 percent in North Dakota.

Nationally, per capita incomes increased by 5 percent in 1995, the best performance since a 5.5 percent rise in 1990, according to the report Thursday from the Commerce Department.

Outside the West, the big gainers were scattered across the country, with Louisiana posting the biggest increase of any state, a rise of 6.9 percent.

ISRAELI PARTY ACCEPTS IDEA OF INDEPENDENT PALESTINIAN STATE

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Swiftly answering the PLO's decision to end its call for Israel's destruction, the governing Labor Party on Thursday abandoned its long-standing opposition to a Palestinian state.

With its landmark vote, Labor discarded what was once a bedrock tenet and became the first significant party in Israel to at least tacitly accept the idea of an independent Palestinian state, once unthinkable for most Israelis.

The move came a day after the Palestine National Council annulled clauses in the PLO charter that called for Israel's destruction.

The momentous exchange of gestures is expected to bolster the Israeli-Palestinian peace process, frozen since a series of suicide bombings by Islamic militants in February and March killed 59 victims in Israel.

Taking a stand

■ Men Against Rape protests much-avoided issue, has low turnout

Rick Druse
staff reporter

A small group of men and women wearing blue ribbons marched across campus Thursday night protesting rape.

The Men Against Rape Society sponsored the march, titled "Take Back the Pride." The group and those who participated in the march let the campus know they are taking a stand against rape.

"It's an issue on campus that everyone doesn't like to talk about," Jason Rucker, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, said.

Rucker said he thought the low turnout was due to many people's avoidance of the subject.

He said he joined the march to be part of a group that is trying to erase the hesitance of doing something about the issue.

The group marched from Weber Hall to the free speech zone, where Mark Hurst, doctoral intern at University Counseling Services, spoke about rape.

"This is something very harmful to both men and women," Hurst said. "Our society is such that women feel threatened by men."

Hurst said men need to become aware of themselves and how to make changes in the male socialization.

"Men many times don't come into counseling because they have been taught not to be vulnerable," Hurst said. "I think that this march is really the start of awareness."

Paul English, junior in history and coordinator of the march, said he was a little disappointed with the number of people that showed up for the event.

"It's not the numbers. It's the quality, and I think we put on good quality," English said. "I think we planted a good seed. Seeds come small, and so do we."

He said he was disappointed with the low turnout from the greek organizations but said they plan to work harder on these groups for future marches and awareness.

MARS, a division of the Student Action Team, will continue next semester with its poster campaign to bring attention to rape issues. It also plans to make the march an annual event.

"People returning next year will hopefully remember," English said.

OSHA

Gore to discuss thoughts on safety

Bill Bontempo
staff writer

Two K-State employees will meet with Vice President Al Gore and Secretary of Labor Robert Reich at the White House today to discuss their concerns about safety in the workplace.

Celebrations are planned to mark the 25th anniversary of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration Act. The day will also mark the eighth-annual memorial honoring public employees who have been injured or killed in the workplace.

Natalie Brockish and Peggy Lund will be among 30 representatives of the Federation of Public Employees at the memorial celebration.

Lund, a retiree of the K-State Kitchen, and Brockish, a K-State lab technician and chapter president of the Kansas Association of Public Employees (KAPE), were invited to attend by the American Federation of Teachers and KAPE.

Kansas public employees are not covered by federal OSHA laws, and Brockish said she is concerned about this.

She said she is also concerned about the proposed OSHA Reform and Reinvention Act by Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., and Sen. Judd Gregg, R-N.H.

Brockish will meet with Kassebaum and her representatives this afternoon to share her opposition to the legislation.

"We are here to make sure stories are relayed to Nancy Kassebaum so that she knows the importance of OSHA," Brockish said.

Darryl Alexander, Occupational Health and Safety Director for the AFT, said the proposed legislation would eliminate scheduled inspections for most businesses, reduce penalties to companies who violate safety standards and take away workers' rights to demand inspections.

According to a prepared statement by Kassebaum's office, the OSHA Reform and Reinvention Act is designed to improve the workplace by providing incentives for managers to build safety into their products and services.

The proposed legislation calls for employers to assume more responsibility in educating employees on health risks and less spending of government funds on inspections.

The legislation also establishes criteria for defining the severity of violations as well as providing employers with a defense against complaints of injuries suffered by employees who disregard safety guidelines.

Brockish said she was disappointed that Kassebaum supported the legislation.

She said if possible she would like to see K-State under the rules of OSHA so the safety department can have more clout on campus.

Alexander said she also thinks safety considerations are important for student employees at universities.

Students who work in libraries, labs, dining facilities and other university facilities need protection, Alexander said.

She said she has worked with KAPE and various unions for years in efforts to make public employees in Kansas more aware of occupational hazards.

She said Brockish and Lund were looking forward to meeting with Kassebaum.

"It will give us an opportunity to show Senator Kassebaum how important OSHA coverage is government employees," she said.

Stop giving athletes preferential treatment

How many second chances should a person get? When is enough enough?

Apparently for the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, not much short of murder will get you off the football team.

David Damon, former football player, was arrested seven times prior to coming to K-State, mostly on drug-related charges. He was convicted twice, once for selling cocaine and once for possession of marijuana.

But maybe that can be chalked up to youthful indiscretion. After all, everyone deserves a second chance.

And what did Damon do with his second chance? He was convicted of the sexual battery of a woman in a residence hall in 1994, his redshirt year.

Was Damon kicked off the team? Nope. He was suspended for the first two games and played during the rest of the 1995 season. Just before the Holiday Bowl, he allegedly failed a drug test and was suspended indefinitely from the team. He is now enrolled in a junior college and is a part-time K-State student.

Sports figures can get away with practically anything on this campus, as long as they help the team win. As was demonstrated in the fall, K-State football players continue to run into trouble with the law and continue to receive a slap on the wrist at most.

Did K-State recruiters know of Damon's criminal record when they recruited him? More than likely. And they knew he was a potential danger to the student body the moment he set foot on campus.

When he assaulted a woman, he became a very real danger to the women of K-State, and the administration and coaches knew that.

We have stressed time and time again that football players are ambassadors to the University. When are those football players who keep on involving themselves in criminal activities going to clean up their acts and stop embarrassing this University?

SIGNING UP FOR PHONE SERVICES HELPS FARRELL

Editor,

K-State's Farrell Library is in the midst of a fund-raising campaign to obtain matching funds from the National Endowment for the Humanities. As part of the campaign, the library, in conjunction with Southwestern Bell, is helping students sign up for phone service in the fall.

Students can sign up for phone service and avoid the new connection rush in August, as long as they know their new address. All they need to do is come by the library next week, April 29-May 3, or to the K-State Student Union Tuesday or Wednesday and fill out the appropriate form.

Faculty members or others in the community may augment their service by adding call waiting, three-way calling or other amenities. For each person the library signs up, Southwestern Bell will make a donation to Farrell's fund-raising effort.

If you aren't in need of phone service or service upgrades, another way to support Farrell is to attend the K-State football team's annual spring scrimmage, the Purple and White Game, at 1 p.m. this Saturday. This year, Bill Snyder has generously agreed to donate the admission fees — $3 for adults and $2 for children — to the library's fund-raising campaign.

Funds raised during the campaign will be used to purchase furnishings for the newly constructed 24-hour student study area and for general library acquisitions. Please support the "Get Connected for a Good Cause" to benefit Farrell, and get out and support the Cats Saturday.

AWARENESS WEEK TO EXPOSE CAMPUS TO ABORTION FACTS

Editor,

One of out of every three children in the United States is killed by abortion. These individuals will never be known, their promise never realized. Our generation is the first to witness the results of mass abortion in America. The first of more than 36 million children to be sacrificed to the abortion industry would be young adults graduating from college today.

Worse yet, many of the women who initially survived the tragedy of Roe v.

Wade are being lured by short-term convenience into having abortions themselves.

Abortion on demand has not only killed children but has also done irreparable damage to the bodies and minds of millions of women.

Society has become desensitized to the horror of abortion. The apathetic masses would rather sacrifice the lives of the unborn and the well-being of women in the name of "choice" and "privacy" than face what abortion is and do something to try to stop it.

We, the members of KSU Students for the Right to Life, are sponsoring Life Awareness Week to increase knowledge of abortion on campus and provide support for those victimized by abortion. It is our sincere hope the students and faculty will take time out to pray for the women, men and children affected by abortion.

For more information, contact KSU Students for the Right to Life at Union Box 38 in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

Educating Southwest Kansas

If you're from southwestern Kansas, you know what I'm talking about.

Look on the map. Southwest Kansas is home to thousands of square miles of wheat fields, corn fields, feed lots, natural gas fields, cities and towns. But it is not home to a single four-year institution of higher learning.

Kansans from this region have the choice of driving several hours to attend other universities, attending junior college, taking courses over telephone lines or being under-educated. This set of choices does not present itself to most other Kansans, who all live within a few hours of at least one state university or other private institutions.

Many southwest Kansans attend K-State. Being away from home in a region that is a little different from the one they came from might be a good thing in itself.

But unlike students from northeast, southeast and northwest Kansas, they had little choice but to relocate far from home to get a complete educational experience.

This lack of educational options creates yet another problem for rural communities in the area. When the best and the brightest of southwest Kansas have no choice but to relocate to pursue higher education, it worsens the "brain drain," or flight of educated people, out of rural areas, which has been plaguing rural communities for decades.

Non-traditional and continuing education students from this region have even fewer educational options. They often have subsistence jobs, children or both, making their access higher learning difficult enough without being several hours away from a four-year college.

The best most southwest Kansans can do without relocating is to attend junior college or take Fort Hays State University outreach courses or Telnet courses.

The best one can hope for by attending junior college is to transfer into a four-year college (and subsequently relocating outside the area) or settle for an associates degree.

Telnet courses have done much to try to meet the educational needs of rural Kansans from all parts of the state. Telnet telephone bills get expensive, though, and the quality of Telnet courses is just above correspondence courses. They're just not the same as taking a class in person and being part of a campus community.

Like junior colleges, Telnet does not make a four-year degree possible either. Fort Hays State outreach courses can help out, but the hassle of transferring credits from junior college and Fort Hays State courses to try to piece a degree together is unnecessary when there is a solution to the problem.

And, yes, there is a solution to the problem.

It's not a simple solution, a bandage to cover up the problem or a quick fix, but it would be feasible if enough people take this issue seriously.

Southwest Kansas is home to three junior colleges in Garden City, Dodge City and Liberal. These three sites should remain the junior colleges they are now, offering associates degrees.

Together, the three campuses could constitute a new Southwest Kansas State University, a full-fledged, four-year institution modeled on K-State, that would give southwest Kansans the opportunity to attend college closer to home.

The university would undoubtedly be a draw for students in extreme northern Texas, the Oklahoma panhandle and southeast Colorado, regions that also have limited educational opportunities.

Students probably would have to take some courses at all three campuses, to be sure, and there would be some commuting involved. But the commute would be much less than from southwest Kansas to Fort Hays State.

Southwest Kansas State University, on the other hand, could offer students the chance to attend one college (albeit with three campuses), with one curriculum and with no transferring necessary.

Creating this new university would cost some money, of course, but by making higher education conveniently available to these Kansans, the investment would pay off.

Better-educated farmers and ranchers in the area would mean increased productivity, higher profits, and better soil and water conservation. K-State Extension Services could be integrated into the classroom as well as the field.

Better-educated public school teachers would be able to maintain their teaching certification much easier. By becoming better educated themselves, they would be able to apply their improved skills in the classroom. Most public school districts pay scales are based on experience and educational levels, so higher education would improve teachers' salaries, too.

In general, making higher education more accessible for them would make southwest Kansans even more productive and increase their quality of life for everyone.

It would definitely be worth the investment.

realities of a Southern heritage

The other day I did something I rarely do, which is walk through Manhattan Town Center. As an illustration of why I avoid this practice, I saw in a window of a T-shirt shop a shirt with a Confederate flag and the words "The South will rise again."

I was quite disappointed by this, more so than being angered. You see, I was raised in the South, more precisely North Carolina.

On my mother's side, I come from a long line of old southern families. One of the first memories I have is my grandfather teaching me to sing "Dixie," and later him teaching me in detail about all our ancestors who served with the Confederacy during the Civil War.

Sprinkled into the many conversations I had with him were racial epithets and strong opinions about racial inequality. On other issues he could be open-minded, but on this one he remained inflexible.

I admired my grandfather greatly. He came from a poor background but worked his way up, eventually becoming a department head in a large textile company. He went around the world and country and had interesting tales from all the places he had been. He managed to provide well for his family and put his daughters through college.

Due to the fact I loved and admired him greatly, it took me a while to come to terms with the fact that he was dead wrong in his opinions about race. Many times in life we look for guidance from the ones we trust. The trick is to be able to pick out the good from the bad in what we hear.

The T-shirt struck another chord in me, though — again dealing with my Southern heritage. After high school, I went off to Cambridge in England, where my peer group consisted primarily of Americans.

Within this group, four of us were from the South. There was hardly a day that went by when we were not subjected to comments about our accents or digs about our supposedly hickish nature. This did not end until we took appropriate measures and showed what true Southern gentlemen we were. Afterwards, anyone making Southern cracks had nearby women jumping down their throats.

The fact is I am proud of my Southern heritage, despite all the problems it has.

This is the same as German people having every right to be proud of their heritage, despite the Holocaust.

The thing that really saddened me about the shirt was the sentiment was not behind raising the good things about Southern heritage, but only the bad. It was about the racism and division that is still being taught to this day.

If these people would only take a look at the South, they would realize that it has already risen again. The economic situation is much better than it was during reconstruction or even during the pre-Civil War days. While racism and other problems remain, the situation is much better than it was even 40 years ago.

This year Atlanta, one of the most southern of cities, will play host to the Olympic games. For all the world to see, they are an example of how far things have come.

Observe this, though. The progress made was not based on hatred and division, but took place because of the people who were willing to look beyond the old ways to form a better society. It took place not under the confederate banner but under the stars and stripes that unite us all.

ACCIDENT

The accident occurred on Todd Road between Denison Avenue and Elaine Drive. Todd Road is a quiet, tree-lined residential street one block north of Claflin Avenue.

The loud bang of the accident drew nearly 20 people into the street, most of them Pi Phi sorority members and their friends and neighborhood residents.

Ryan Zahner, senior in mechanical engineering, witnessed most of the accident from his home on the north side of Todd Road, one house away from where the accident occurred.

"I saw it while I was walking by the window," Zahner said. It happened about 11:45 a.m., he said.

"By the time I got out there a couple of sorority girls were already out there," he said. "The girl who hit him already ran into the sorority house to call 911."

After seeing and hearing the accident, Zahner went into the street to help Martin.

"He wasn't wearing a helmet," Zahner said. "His ears were bleeding, and his eyes were going different directions."

The members of the Pi Phi sorority house spent Thursday afternoon and evening dealing emotionally with the situation.

Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs, said greek houses have a crisis management system in place to deal with trauma like a fire or a death.

"It's a group of people that care about each other and are there so the members have a good experience at K-State," Robel said.

K-State is still dealing with the death on April 17 of Eric Dupuis, freshman in park resource management.

Dupuis was hit by a car while riding a motorcycle at the intersection of Denison and Anderson avenues. He was not wearing a helmet.

2 similar motorcycle accidents raise concerns

Staff writer
Collegian

East Todd Road is generally a quiet, residential road — the kind of road children ride their bikes on and college students jaywalk across.

But late Thursday morning east Todd Road was the site of a critical motorcycle accident — Manhattan's second in fewer than 10 days.

Both accidents occurred on sunny days. Both involved a one-passenger vehicle and a motorcycle. Both accidents included motorcycle riders who were not wearing helmets.

Lt. Doug Howser, Riley County Police Department, said Kansas does not have a motorcycle helmet law. However, riders are required to have a windshield or wear eye protection.

Motorcycle drivers need to be aware that they are less visible than most vehicles, Howser said. Some states even have a headlight law to increase motorcycle visibility, but Kansas doesn't have any such law.

The amount of smaller vehicles, such as motorcycles, bicycles and scooters, on the road are increasing as summer approaches, Howser said.

K-State has emotional assistance for students involved in accidents.

"There are very normal ways that people will respond that may seem abnormal after trauma," Dorinda Lambert, psychologist at University Counseling Services, said.

After being involved or being close to someone involved in an accident, students can be emotional and need support from people around them.

Thursday's accident will not only affect the people involved and the people close to those involved. The people who were close to Eric Dupuis could be hit with a double-whammy because of the similarities in the accidents, Lambert said.

Dupuis was killed April 17 at the corner of Denison and Anderson avenues. As in Thursday's accident, Dupuis was not wearing a helmet.

The best way friends can help those involved, or close to, accidents is to listen. The public way, including the memorial service, friends close to Dupuis handled his death was an excellent example of dealing with trauma, Lambert said.

CONCERT

Most of the tickets we have we cannot give them away, Domek said.

Tickets Unlimited is selling tickets from $40 to $60, and VIP is selling tickets for between $75 and $135. It all depends on the section of the tickets and what price the brokers are charging.

"We cannot guarantee the authenticity of tickets unless they are from the Coliseum or Salina," he said.

Thomas said consumers can never know what they are going to get when they go through a scalper or broker.

"It's all bogus," he said.

Consumers never know what they are getting — so buyer beware, Thomas said.

"Don't get me wrong. There are some good ticket brokers out there," he said. "Then there are some who are preying on the locals, and they're not on the up-and-up."

Keele said his company had invested almost $40 for each ticket so that the price of the tickets was worth it.

"I may buy the tickets from someone in Manhattan for $35, then sell it for $50 to $60," he said.

The mark-up in price is to cover the cost that goes into each ticket to cover advertising costs, cost of procuring the tickets and cost of buying the actual ticket, Keele said.

"We are a service-oriented business," he said. "I'm used to people contacting me."

Keele said his company does not do this in his area of Norman, Okla., and there are no laws against scalping there.

"We are a legitimate deal and a member of the Better Business Bureau," he said.

Domek said he has been marking ticket price below cost.

"We can't give them away," he said. Domek said state governments need to regulate scalping so people are not being taken advantage of by the bad scalpers.

Domek said his company does not buy from just anybody off the street. "We get a copy of their driver's license and know something about our people," he said.

These brokers follow the tour around the country to make money from scalping, Thomas said.

"A lot of bigger groups will get federal injunctions to stop bootleggers who sell non-licensed concert merchandise, but you can't stop scalping with a federal injunction," Thomas said.

It gets to be a matter of how much of life one wants to have regulated, Kennedy said.

"If people of the state of Kansas want a scalping law, I would enforce one," he said. Kennedy said the legislature has not passed a statute outlawing scalping and it is up to Kansas residents.

4th-seed
Cats begin
Big 8 fight

Shane McCormick
contributing writer

The K-State tennis team will start postseason play on the courts this weekend as the Wildcats will travel to Kansas City, Mo., for the Big 8 Championships.

The Cats come into this weekend's contest on a two-game losing streak where they lost their last two Big 8 duals to the state of Oklahoma.

Last weekend, the Cats fell to Oklahoma State and Oklahoma. The score of each dual was 5-2.

Coach Steve Bietau said the team definitely needed some rest this weekend.

"We didn't practice on Tuesday, and I think that helped the team," he said. "The team really needed the rest physically and mentally."

The Cats will come into the Big 8 Tournament with the fourth seed. They will be matched against the Colorado Buffaloes, which own the fifth seed.

In an earlier meeting between the two squads, the Cats served up a victory against the Buffaloes, 4-3. In the dual in Boulder, the Cats captured the doubles point from the Buffaloes. The Cats then split the six singles matches.

Bietau said beating the Buffaloes will give the Cats somewhat of an advantage this weekend.

"We beat them in Boulder, and that's not easy with the altitude," he said. "And it doesn't hurt mentally to know that you've beaten a team already."

The Cats will enter the tournament with five players with a .500 or better record in singles action. The team is led by a tremendous 1-2 punch with senior Karina Kuregian and sophomore Yana Dorodnova. Kuregian produced a tremendous 14-1 record this spring, while Dorodnova stands at 12-5.

But Bietau said the mental aspect of the game will decide this weekend's winners.

"Really, whatever team comes into this weekend's matches mentally prepared will see some positive results," he said.

Football benefits
Farrell Library, shows new talent

John Berggren
staff writer

Wildcat fans will have their first look at the 1996 edition of the K-State football team tomorrow in the annual spring Purple vs. White scrimmage.

One thing will be different this year, however. A $3 admission will be charged in a fund-raising effort for Farrell Library.

"Hopefully, this won't deter people from attending," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I would think if anything it would bring more people out, not just to support the football team, but to help the library."

A grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities is matching all proceeds earned at the game. The money is to be given to Farrell Library construction.

As for what will happen on the field, Snyder said it will be treated like any practice.

"The most important thing we want to get accomplished is that we evaluate our fundamentals," he said. "Hopefully, what we've learned in the 14 days of spring practice will show up tomorrow."

"We also want to make sure we remain healthy. For the most part, we will play everyone. We've got special rules designed for the scrimmage to guard against injuries. There will be no blocking below the waist, because the chances of an injury occurring is greater."

Even the highly touted Cody Lee Smith, who missed last year because of a stomach ailment, will look to see some playing time.

"Cody will see as many repetitions as anybody will tomorrow," Snyder said.

The practice might be treated by the coaches the same as others, but for players trying to earn a position on the team, it will be one more chance to make a good impression.

"Everybody will be working to improve themselves," Snyder said. "Some people will be working to solidify their spots, and others will be working hard to make their stock go up."

The game could be used as a gauge for how good the Cats might be next year, but Snyder said it won't tell him anything he does not already know.

"We really don't learn much more information than we already have," Snyder said. "Even if we have a good performance tomorrow, that doesn't mean we're ready for the first game."

With more than 2,000 fans expected Saturday, he said the event could be more than profitable for Farrell Library.

"From a player standpoint, it sends the message that there is expressive interest in how we do," he said. "I think good attendance could be positive in several ways. It will give our freshmen some motivation to work hard. For our veterans, it won't be anything that they haven't seen."

Former K-State shortstop Bobby Randall had the second-highest Wildcat career batting average ever at .371. A quarter of a century has passed, and now Randall has taken the reins at the University of Kansas with a 21-22 overall record.

K-State/KU sandlot feud finishes this weekend

Chris May
contributing writer

The feud goes on.

The K-State baseball team returns home tonight to be host to the Kansas Jayhawks. The Wildcats are coming off an 11-3 victory against the Jayhawks Wednesday night in Lawrence.

On the mound for the Cats will be right-hander Eric Yanz. Yanz has an ERA of 5.49 and is 4-5 on the season.

The Jayhawks are scheduled to start right-hander Mario Oipari, who is 0-2 on the season and has an ERA of 8.34.

This is the third game in a five-game series with the Jayhawks. The Hawks won the first game in Manhattan 24-5 Tuesday.

The Cats will be trying to stop any celebration the Jayhawks might be planning. At the game Tuesday, the Jayhawks were celebrating at home plate after a grand-slam home run by pinch hitter Les Walrod.

"I know the guys were upset with the celebration that was going on there when that last grand-slam home run out at home plate," Coach Mike Clark said. "When you're up 16 runs, you don't sit there and do all that stuff in front of them."

K-State will bring a 24-18 record overall and an 8-11 conference record into the contest, and the Jayhawks will have a 21-22 record and an 11-14 conference record.

Tonight's game is scheduled for 5 p.m., and the gates open at 4 p.m.

The Cats travel to Lawrence to finish the series Saturday and Sunday. Saturday, junior first baseman Brad Harker will be honored at the battle in Lawrence. Harker, a Lawrence native, will throw out the first pitch and will address the crowd before the game. The gate receipts and donations from the game will go to Harker's medical fund.

In other K-State baseball news, left-hander Jon Oiseth was named Big 8 Pitcher of the Week for his performance against Missouri last week. In the final four innings, he helped the Cats win 7-4 at Missouri. Later that week, Oiseth pitched a nine-inning game against Oklahoma in an 8-2 win against the Sooners. Oiseth pitched 13 innings, allowed 12 hits, struck out 13 and had an ERA of 1.38 for the week.

"My feeling about Kansas is terrific. I love it here. K-State's baseball program is in great hands with Mike Clark. They don't need me. Kansas needs me."

—BOBBY RANDALL
KU BASEBALL COACH

Isn't it ironic?

Former K-State shortstop leads Hawks against Wildcats in weekend match-up

When former K-State baseball players return to Frank Myers Field, it is usually to watch their alma mater defeat the opposing team.

But when former K-State shortstop Bobby Randall steps onto the field, he's hoping K-State doesn't emerge with the victory.

Why? Randall is the coach of the Kansas Jayhawks. Returning to Frank Myers Field is a matter of competition and has no sentimentality for him, he said.

"I've been gone for a long time, nearly 20 years, so there's no sentimentality. I do love being back in the state of Kansas," Randall said.

But what does have a special place in the heart of the former all-Big 8 selection are the pine trees that line the outfield fences.

"When I was here, those pine trees were pine cones. They had just planted them. I tell the guys that every time we come here," Randall said.

"The park has changed dramatically. The stands — it's really a lot different. But the field is basically the same."

And although he's a Wildcat by merit, Randall said he is happy coaching at K-State's archrival, Kansas.

"My feeling about Kansas is terrific. I love it here," Randall said. "K-State's baseball program is in great hands with Mike Clark. They don't need me. Kansas needs me."

A native of Gove, Randall began his relationship with K-State with a dual scholarship from former baseball coach Bob Brasher and former basketball coach Tex Winter.

Randall played basketball for only one season before dedicating his time to baseball. After graduating from K-State in 1970 with a degree in business and finance, Randall was drafted by the Los Angeles Dodgers, a team that had sought him since high school.

After spending seven years as a second baseman in the Dodgers' minor league system, with stops at Ogden, Utah; Bakersfield, Calif.; Albuquerque, N.M., and Waterbury, Conn., Randall was traded to the Minnesota Twins, where he helped turn a league record 203 double plays at second base. He retired from the Twins in 1981. Randall spent a season as player/coach of the Bakersfield team in 1972.

Randall spent three years as an assistant at Iowa State before being promoted and spent the next 11 seasons at the helm of Cyclone baseball.

Randall's career batting average of .371 ranks in a tie for the second-highest career average in K-State history, and he is just one of four Cats ever to be taken in the first two rounds of the professional draft.

Although baseball was Randall's first love, his priorities were set strongly on furthering his education.

A 26th-round selection by the Dodgers out of high school, Randall chose instead to go to college. He was drafted two more times by the Los Angeles organization before he finally signed with it, all the while citing education as his goal.

Randall said it was a decision he's not regretted.

"It gave me the maturity that I needed as a player and as an individual, coming from a small town of 120. I needed that. It also prepared me academically," Randall said.

"It took a lot of the pressure off me because I always knew I had another career other than baseball to fall back on."

With his feet firmly on the ground in Lawrence, Randall said he is dumbfounded when he takes a look how the final season of Big 8 baseball has turned out.

"Wow! Look at Missouri," he said. "What really surprises me is that there are two teams that should be making their charge, and they really haven't. I don't know, maybe K-State is getting ready to make their charge, and they could. They're poised well right now, and they have a solid pitching foundation."

Looking around the conference, Randall said he was surprised by the lack of pitching in all programs, including his own Jayhawk staff. And with postseason conference seedings up in the air, the Kansas nine could still find themselves left out of the Big 8 Tournament. But they aren't the only ones, as K-State, Iowa State and Nebraska all have postseason hopes clinging on the last few conference games of the season.

And K-State and Iowa State, with a strong finish, could ruin Kansas' bid for a postseason appearance. That in itself has a strong irony for Randall.

"I hadn't really thought about that," he said. "Now that I realize that, I'm mad at those guys!"

Crew teams to wrap up season at Midwest Championships

John Berggren
staff writer

The K-State men's and women's crew teams will wrap up their regular season play Saturday and Sunday at the Midwest Championships meet in Madison, Wisc., at Lake Wingra.

The varsity men's four, novice men's eight, women's novice eight, women's varsity, women's high school four and men's high school four will compete in the event.

The Midwest Championships is considered the regional meet for all states in the Midwest to qualify for nationals.

"There will be around 30 teams at the meet," Coach Al Koch said. "A lot of the teams from the Big 10, Big 8 and teams in Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska will be there."

"We're looking to see a lot of good competition this weekend."

The stakes will be high this weekend as teams that place in the top three in their respective events will carry their times into the nationals this summer.

Even if a team doesn't place in the top three, it can still go to nationals as long-shots.

Koch said he wasn't planning on taking anyone to nationals.

"From what the kids are saying, I haven't heard of anyone expressing much interest to go to nationals," Koch said.

"Most people are leaving this summer or are working at jobs," he said. "Their interest could change, though, if somebody places in the top three or places pretty well. Then they might change their minds."

Koch said the weather this weekend could be a factor.

"The course will be a short 1,800 meter, so we won't be racing the usual lengths,"

Koch said. "The weather is projected to be around the 30s, and it is supposed to be windy. Their lake is protected from the wind pretty well so the race should go on as planned, but the weather could definitely be a factor this weekend."

Still, with the season wrapping up, Koch said this meet was the one his team has been looking forward to all year.

"This is what we've been shooting for all spring," Koch said. "I think our novice men's eight and our men's varsity four have the best shots at placing. They both are coming off of good times last weekend in Creighton."

Walk to dedicate trail

► NATURE TRAIL

Trail provides natural scenery

Olena Garvin
staff reporter

The new section of the Linear Park Trail opens Saturday with a dedication ceremony and a Volksmarch.

The Linear Park Trail is nine miles and follows the Kansas and Big Blue rivers as well as Wildcat Creek. The trail travels throughout the scenic areas of Manhattan and allows one to encounter the wildlife of the areas.

"The trail was first started in 1986 when Manhattan voters passed the idea to have the trail," Jim Colley, recreation superintendent, said.

The new portion of the Linear Park Trail was developed with the cooperation of the Rails to Trails effort. Rails to Trails is a national citizen's group that helps to convert abandoned railroad beds and right-of-ways into recreational trails. This part of the Linear Trail is between Poliska Lane and Anderson Avenue.

This portion of the trail is surfaced with limestone screenings to provide a firm surface for biking, jogging or walking, Colley said.

Wheelchairs and strollers are also suitable for this portion of the trail.

Saturday morning, people will be able to walk this six-mile section of the trail by participating in a Volksmarch. A Volksmarch is a leisurely walk through a section of a scenic or historic area. The walk is non-competitive, and participants can set their own pace.

Many people have already participated in Volksmarches and have kept track of this through a booklet that is stamped at each march they attend.

"Volksmarches are what some people do year in and year out, and they will have an opportunity to have their booklets stamped," Colley said.

Incorporated with the Volksmarch will be a dedication ceremony for the new section of the trail. Those participating in the walk will be able to walk half the trail, and then stop to see the dedication ceremonies before they return to the beginning of the trail.

"The ceremonies will include several guest speakers, including those responsible with the Rails to Trails effort," Colley said.

Other speakers include Mayor Sydney Carlin; Terry DeWeese, director of Manhattan Parks and Recreation; and Marie Steichen, chairwoman of the parks and recreation advisory board.

JUSTIN STAHLMAN/Collegian

Ceremonies begin at 8 a.m., when those wishing to participate in the Volksmarch should meet at the south shelter of Anneberg Lake to begin the walk.

The dedication ceremony will begin at 10 a.m. at the north end of the Manhattan Holidome by the woods.

After the dedication, a barbecue will follow at the Anneberg Lake south shelter.

All events are free and open to the public.

The Blue River Nature Trail, below Tuttle Creek Dam, is open. The trail provides wildlife and natural scenery.

"It's about a mile in length," Steve Prockish, park ranger, said. The trail runs along the existing Blue River channel, open grassland then into open woodland, he said.

The trail offers some beautiful scenery, Prockish said.

"It will take you down to the point where the old river channel meets the current river channel," he said.

The marshlands, wetland areas and wetland birds are visible from there.

After that, the trail leads to a heavily wooded area that is less than 150 yards long.

There is some poison ivy in that area, but it is sprayed regularly, Prockish said.

Along the way, resting benches are provided, he said.

"There are also signs that tell you about some of the fish that are found in the lake and river, and the dam itself," he said.

Volunteers helped install the signs, he said.

"There are also tree identifications," Prockish said. Ancient cottonwood trees are featured in one section along the trail, he said.

"A side loop off the trail will take you to a wildlife observation blind where you can open the front window and observe wildlife," Prockish said.

At a leisurely pace, the trail can be walked in 20 to 30 minutes. Prockish said the trail is safe for children and adults. The trail is open all year long and is free of charge.

The trail was designed as an internship project by two K-State students.

Many volunteers and workers put in long and hard hours into the trail, Prockish said.

"We don't have a dollar figure for the cost of building the trail," he said.

Not a lot of money has been tied in to this project, he said.

WEEKEND

CHEAP EATS

Your loose change has more use to it than laundry and parking meters

As the semester comes to an end, students are finding themselves out of money. Whether it was the expensive spring break or the ever-rising cost of expanded cable, the savings and financial aid are quickly dwindling.

What is a hungry, poor student to do? The answer could be right across the street.

Aggieville is within walking distance of campus and has more than a few places to eat without clearing out your bank account, if you know where to go and get there on time. Most food specials are offered from 5 to 7 p.m.

The best deal is free food. Friday nights at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon you can have all you'd like from the 16-foot, free-food bar, or if pizza is your fancy, Auntie Mae's Parlor provides all-you-can-eat pizza.

With only $1, your options are still open. Again, Rusty's Last Chance lures you in with Tuesday $1 taco bar, Wednesday $1.25 Rusty burgers and fries and Thursday 25-cent hamburgers.

But Rusty's is not alone. Silverado's also offers 25-cent hamburgers, but only on Friday nights. Scoreboard has Wednesday dollar deals with your choice of hamburger, fries, onion rings or tater tots for $1.

Sundays and Mondays at Scoreboard offers a hamburger and fries for $2.

Feeling like a big spender? Found some extra change in your couch? For those with $2 or even $3, your feast awaits you. Aggieville Pizza has a slice of pizza and a drink for $1.08, and a 10-inch, one-topping pizza is $2.99.

12th Street Pub has a menu with variety and randomly reoccurring specials. Always on the menu is the Order from Chaos. For $2.95, you can choose three of the following: pub salad, French fries, baked potato, fresh vegetables, rice, potato salad, pasta or fruit.

Adriene Taylor, bartender, said the Order from Chaos is popular with women.

Dilly's Deli offers a half of one of its unique sandwiches and a side order of salad or soup for $1.88 on Thursdays. Wednesday's special is a whole Reuben sandwich for $2.25.

Rock-a-Belly Bar and Deli has the Sub-o-da-week for $3.75, and a Big Pepsi is $1 with free refills.

Rock-a-Belly's philosophy is good food might take longer and cost more, but it is worth it. "We have a very small kitchen and a half-fast cook! If you have the time to wait, we promise you a good meal," is part of the slogan printed on the menus.

If leftovers are an important part of your diet, Chopsticks might be the place for you. $6.60 for an order of fried rice might seem expensive, but there will probably be some left for tomorrow and maybe the next day.

Better yet, split the cost with a friend. Creative financing is a must in desperate times.

Usually eating at home is a cost-effective way to feed a hungry college student. Ramen noodles have long been considered a staple in the diet of those living in the dormitories. Bought on sale at four for a dollar and requiring only water to prepare, these noodles are the best buy around.

For some, the quest to eat within their means has become a hobby. Erich Oberle, junior in mathematics, and his roommates have made eating inexpensively an artistic and scientific adventure.

"We are the connoisseurs of fine macaroni and cheese," Oberle said.

The four men have collected more than 35 different macaroni and cheese boxes from different brands. Limiting themselves to boxes with a vertical design, the boxes are displayed along the top of the kitchen cabinets.

These men are not drawn to macaroni and cheese just by the color or shape of a box.

"Macaroni and cheese is a meal all by itself," Tarl Petersen, sophomore in graphic design, said.

"We got burnt out on Ramen noodle last semester living in the dorm," Petersen said.

Science plays a role in macaroni choice. Brands are rated from one to 10 on things like cheesiness, texture and flavor.

"HyVee is the best so far and is only like 33 cents a box," Petersen said. "We buy in bulk so it cost us less."

With some effort, eating at home can consist of more than noodles and cheese. Heartland Share is a food program open to anyone. For $13 and two hours community service a month, you will receive one food share. A typical monthly share consists of frozen chicken and turkey, sausage, frozen vegetables, fresh fruit, lettuce, potatoes and seasoning mixes.

According to the Heartland Share pamphlet volunteer time is "any service you provide for an individual or group and do not receive monetary reimbursement." This can be babysitting for a friend, helping out at your church or giving time to a campus committee.

Everyone can participate. Sign-up times are weekdays 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Blue Valley Memorial United Methodist Church or Riley County Senior Service Center.

These are by no means all the specials or methods of eating cheap. There is always Food-4-Less and Aldi's for the college student on a constricted grocery budget.

Sometimes you can stumble across your own bargains. The best way is to get your eyes and ears open for those good food deals.

"Smoke"

Nolan: * of five stars

This movie is set in 1990, revolving around the life and times of the frequent customers and loiterers at a New York tobacco shop.

Paul is a writer who has been encountering severe writer's block since the tragic death of his wife of four years in the past.

He shuffles into the tiny shop, brooding, deriving tiny pleasure from telling tall tales of vivid characters facing moral and personal dilemmas.

By chance, Paul meets Rashid, a young boy who has gotten into some trouble with local gangs. Rashid saves Paul from a life-threatening situation, and Paul offers to repay the debt by giving Rashid a place to stay. Rashid also has a difficult past that he has yet to deal with.

Enter Auggie, the cynical tobacco store owner who also has skeletons in his closet involving a former woman and the tempestuous days of his youth.

He has not yet resolved the differences between them. Through struggle and strife, all of these characters undergo intense introspection, forced by outside circumstances to recognize the sordid states of their lives, and to eventually face the visage of their souls.

It's not a tearjerker and not a comedy, just a mellow, slice-of-life story.

This true American portrait convincingly features a cast of Harvey Keitel as the modest owner of a cigar shop, William Hurt as "just a regular" and Stockard Channing as a desperate and washed up one-eyed drunk in the average-joe scenario and pulls it off.

Coincidence, karma and an insignificant urban street corner are combined in a story so human with characters so down-to-earth and actors so believable that it is one to drop everything to see.

The screenplay was adapted from "Auggie Wren's Christmas Story," on an Op-ed piece written by novelist Paul Auster that was published in the New York Times.

Directed by Wayne Wang (The Joy Luck Club), the charm of "Smoke" is in the unlikely bond of neighbors that create kindred but rundown Camelot of the classic Brooklyn intersection.

"Blue in the Face," the movie's "companion" movie also starring Keitel, is now playing in theaters (in Kansas City).

"Crumb"

Nolan:  of five stars

This documentary peers into the private life of Robert Crumb, one of the most eccentric artists of the 20th century.

Raised by a barbarous father and an amphetamine-addled mother, Robert and his two brothers were all artists.

Robert was the only one to survive the experience.

One of his brothers is a recluse, who lives with his mother; the other brother lives alone in a New York flat, in rehabilitation from an obsession that led to his molesting Asian girls on the subway.

At an early age, the introspective, intellectual Robert lashed out at the society that rejected him. His art reflects a truth stranger than fiction, focusing on sexual decrepitude and the lusting, suffering, crazed nature of humanity.

His frank depictions of sexual power struggles have received intense criticism from feminists, who are quoted in the documentary.

Shy and antisocial, Crumb has rejected several movie offers, as well as an offer to be host of Saturday Night Live in the 1970s.

He has thus remained an iconoclast of underground culture.

Page: * out of five stars

A disturbing documentary about the morbid and misogynist comic endeavors of Robert Crumb, the movie presents the artist and his work as innovative but more a manifestation of his sexual hostility, reducing him to "dirty old man" with a pen.

Crumb's lack of discretion and self-righteous defense of his themes of warped sexual fetishes and the reoccurring violent objectification of women throughout the film paint him out to be proudly the kind of guy who sits the darkest corner of a bar, eyes shifting from crotch crotch and talking to himself.

Crumb is not one to be celebrated as an American icon of artistic innovation but regarded as a potential sex offender.

To the credit of the film, documenting the success at influence of Crumb's isolated and dangerous perversic exposes the reality that there is a powerful market for misogyny.

It reveals what was to his generation considered a obscenity. He has now played a part in justifying the infiltration of this animated pornography into a so-called cultural expression.

The most blatant example of this potent sexism in his work is in a piece he describes at length in the movie called "A Bitchin' Bod," which depicts himself raping his ideal of the perfect female body, one with which the he has been removed and only the well-endowed naked man silently obeys his every whim.

While the movie responsibly includes some criticism of his work, it is questionable as to whether or not it glorifies the dangerous fantasies of a frustrated and psychopathic misogynist with an Oedipus complex.

MUSIC CLINIC

Artist teaches music students, conducts concert

Brent Smith
 staff reporter

An Academy Award and Emmy-nominated composer who music critics say could become the Leonard Bernstein of this age worked with music students this week.

Composer Stephen Melillo is at K-State as a clinician working with the concert and symphony bands. He is also giving styles lectures, working with the Manhattan High School bands and meeting privately to work with students.

Melillo will guest conduct a concert with the symphony band at 3 p.m. this Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

"But my main goal is to prepare these future music educators," Melillo said.

Melillo will be conducting two pieces of music with the symphony band, but he said they couldn't be described in words.

"You can't communicate in words something that is expressed through music," Melillo said.

"The title only puts you in the ballpark." Since the beginning of March, Melillo has traveled from Norway to Atlanta to Manhattan doing clinics.

During that time he has had two performances at Carnegie Hall in New York City, one of which was with the United States Navy Band.

Also, on May 10 and 11 Melillo's second symphony, "At Life's Edge," will be world-premiered by the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Gerhard Zimmerman.

Melillo's more than 800 works range from interactive video scores to his first symphony, "S-Matrix."

His scoring works contain 11 feature films and 28 network television shows, including "Home Improvement," "All My Children" and "20/20."

Frank Tracz, director of bands at K-State, has been trying to get Melillo to clinician here since he first arrived three years ago.

"He has such energy and enthusiasm," Tracz said. "His style is completely different from the other clinicians we've had in this year."

Growing up in Greenwich, Conn., Melillo spent his time playing sports and participating in dare-devil activities.

He did not consider becoming a composer. "Never thought about going into music until my second year in college," he said.

Even with the extensive resume Melillo has, he still remains modest about all accomplishments.

"I don't think of doing what I'm doing," he said.

Scott Goldsmith, a sophomore in music performance, said he has enjoyed the opportunity to learn from Melillo.

"He has a way of bringing out musicianship," he said. "He does it because he loves it."

CONCERT

Guest conductor, Stephen Melillo will perform with the symphony band at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

DAMON

July 16, 1992, for communicating threats. Both of those charges were dismissed.

Five months later he was arrested for possession of and the intent to sell/distribute cocaine.

That case was also dismissed. In March 1993, he was charged again with selling cocaine, but this time he was convicted.

A third charge of selling cocaine was also dismissed. In May 1993, he was charged with possession of cocaine, a charge that was dismissed.

And in the last of his offenses in North Carolina, Damon was charged and found guilty of the possession of marijuana.

A year later, Damon enrolled at K-State on a football scholarship — and the charges didn't stop there.

Amy Schulz, a sophomore in family studies and human studies, pressed charges against Damon for an incident in November 1994.

Prior to the 1995 football season, Damon was found guilty of sexual battery.

Two other charges of assault stemming from the incident were dismissed.

"I was at Haymaker to visit my boyfriend. I had just boarded the elevator to go to the basement. He (Damon) was in my way and backed me into a corner," Schulz said.

Schulz said Damon grabbed her on her breasts and groin area while making crude comments.

Schulz also said four other football players, including linebacker Percell Gaskins, stood by while Damon assaulted her.

Although Schulz said she couldn't identify the players, she said Damon identified his teammates during testimony.

The night following the Schulz assault, Damon allegedly assaulted staff members of the residence halls who attempted to have him removed for Schulz's safety.

Riley County Judge Paul Miller sentenced Damon to six months in jail and a year's probation. Instead of serving his time, Damon played football for the Wildcats.

Riley County Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Barry Wilkerson said although he was unable to release the details of the prosecution, he felt Damon was guilty.

But he said Damon didn't agree. "He (Damon) said all along that he didn't do it. At the sentencing, he maintained that he was innocent," Wilkerson said.

Snyder suspended Damon from the first two games of the 1995 season. Damon first played for the Cats in the Akron game and played in every game until his suspension prior to the Holiday Bowl.

In those nine games, Damon tallied 81 tackles, 38 of which were unassisted. He also had six tackles-for-loss and one sack.

Damon also had one blocked punt on his way to being the Cats' fourth-leading tackler.

It was predicted before his release that Damon would replace Gaskins, an NFL draftee, as a linebacker for the 1996-97 season.

"I was really disappointed with the University because I didn't think he (Damon) was going to be allowed to play," Schulz said.

In a pre-spring football press conference, Snyder admitted Damon had expressed an interest in returning to K-State's team.

Snyder also said Damon was attending Highland County Community College and could return to K-State in the fall.

But Damon is attending K-State and enrolled for classes as a part-time student March 8, according to Schaffer's report.

"It's really upsetting (to think Damon might be allowed on the roster). I mean, he burned me, and he burned the University."

"Then he burned them again with failing the drug test," Schulz said.

Elaine Schulz, Amy's mother, said

Damon's return to the Wildcats was wrong.

"I have this thing about higher education. It's not just a right for everyone — you have to earn it. There are plenty of young men there who are student scholar athletes who want an education. People like him (Damon) drag a program down, all in the name of big money."

Elaine said Snyder contacted her about the incident and apologized but said his reasoning for keeping Damon on the team was to turn him into a productive citizen.

"I talked with Coach Snyder about implementing a program to teach the boys on the team about things like this so they know it's wrong," Amy Schulz said.

"But he said a program like that was already in place."

Following the broadcast, President Jon Wefald said the admission of students is based on their academic records.

"Including NCAA criteria and KSU's normal criteria, past criminal behavior of a student is not a question asked," he said.

Wefald also said he was mixed on whether he believed Damon deserved a second chance.

"Yes and no. Every situation should be based on the merits of the case. In general, I believe everyone deserves a second chance," he said.

Senior Associate Athletic Director Jim Epps refused to comment on whether Damon's suspension would be removed.

"I'm sure that we'll meet tomorrow with Coach Snyder and Max Erick (athletic director). First of all, we'll find out from Coach Snyder what future plans, if any, he has of David Damon continuing to be a part of the program," Epps said.

And until the K-State football program refuses to support the type of behavior shown by Damon, Schulz and her family said they will cease to support Wildcat football.

"If they were to remove him, then I would. But not until then," she said.

SGA begins new term, discusses 1st bill

Courtney Marshall
contributing writer

The 1996-97 student senators started off their new term by approving positions.

Amy Knedlik, sophomore in business, was approved as the new attorney general with a vote of 38-13.

Three individuals applied for the position, and two were recommended to Student Body President Chris Hansen for approval.

Senators asked questions about the process of appointing attorney general and the recommendations of the Attorney General Interview Nominee Committee.

Becca Korphage, 1995-96 attorney general and interview chair, fielded questions about the process and the applicants.

"The committee reviews applications and hears the interviews, then sends their recommendation to the (student body) president. The president gets to appoint one of the recommended people, and then you all (senators) have the approval of the appointment," Korphage said.

Other approvals included Jake Breeding, junior in pre-medicine, as arts and science senator to replace the vacant position left by newly appointed chair Aubrey Abbott.

K-State-Salina senators Ryan Johnson and Sana Gebarian were sworn into office and approved by Senate with unanimous consent.

The only bill up for first readings was a proposal for new student health insurance for the 1996-97 school year. After several questions and concerns about prices and competing plans, the bill was referred to the general Senate because no committees have been formed at this time to deal with legislation.

During open period Hansen announced the Student Governing Association will be host to an open house from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. May 1 in the Office of Student Activities and Services on the first floor of the K-State Student Union.

Snyder says player has more to offer

Shana Newell
sports editor

There are two sides to every story, and K-State football coach Bill Snyder said there is more to former K-State linebacker David Damon than a criminal record.

Damon was a redshirt freshman last season who was expected to replace NFL draftee Percell Gaskins on the roster next season. But a suspension only a few weeks before K-State's appearance in the Holiday Bowl resulted in his release from the team.

It was reported by the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics Damon had been suspended for violating team rules. A published report stated that violation was failing a drug test.

Damon's rap sheet also includes three convictions — one for selling cocaine, another for the possession of marijuana and a third for sexual battery. Seven other charges ranging from intent to sell cocaine to assault have been dropped.

Snyder said he recruited Damon with the knowledge of his background and under the belief Damon needed to be given a chance to remove himself from negative influences.

Snyder said the team does background checks. "Maybe not to the degree of what was brought forth here in the last 48 hours," Snyder said. "We visited with David's counsel, and the counsel reiterated some of the instances he had been involved with and stated that at no given time had he been convicted of other than one offense and that he had

Student upgraded to stable condition

Garrett Martin's supporters filled the critical unit waiting room at Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center in Topeka during the weekend.

The post-graduate student was injured late Thursday morning in a motorcycle-car collision on east Todd Road. He was listed in critical but stable condition Sunday evening.

Spencer Martin, senior in turf management and horticulture, said his brother's physical condition remained the same, including multiple fractures to the skull and some blood clotting, but his attitude was showing signs of improvement.

"He's got a little more energy and a little more spunk," Spencer Martin, Garrett's brother, said Sunday afternoon. However, doctors plan to keep him listed in critical condition until Tuesday.

"We're just taking it one day at a time," he said.

Garrett Martin was driving his motorcycle, without a helmet, east on Todd Road about 11:45 a.m. Thursday.

Driver Jamie Goehring, sophomore in pre-nursing, was attempting a left turn westbound on Todd Road when the car and motorcycle collided. Goehring was driving a vehicle owned by Shelly Riche, freshman in pre-health professions program.

Martin was initially transported to the Saint Mary Hospital in Manhattan and then air-lifted to Stormont-Vail, where his friends and family joined him.

According to a Riley County Police Department press release, no charges have been filed, and the accident remains under investigation.

At the time of the accident, Martin was driving to see his fiancée, Sara Rettele, who had been feeling ill. Rettele and Martin's wedding is scheduled for Aug. 10.

Rettele spent most of her weekend at the Stormont-Vail waiting room.

Friday afternoon Martin's co-workers at the K-State career, future

BY J. SCOT BUCHOLZ

Garth Brooks is happy and content with what he is doing now but said he has no definite ideas about his future.

"The voice and everything is a God-given gift," Brooks said.

Brooks said he is not sure what he will do in a few years.

His oldest daughter will then be in school, and his career plans will have to be reconsidered.

"I will do the best with my future, knowing I'm an instrument someone else is playing," he said.

At this time Brooks said he has the best of both worlds because his family travels with him.

"The hardest thing for me is to make sure these kids are not spoiled, rich brats," he said.

He said his kids did not choose this lifestyle, but he and his wife did.

"My kids won't be able to experience riding the bus and going to a public school because of who their dad is," he said.

Brooks said he protects his family from having to deal with the press he receives.

"Seventy-five percent of what is written about me is not true," he said.

Brooks laughed and said most recently he went in for a routine physical, and by the time he got home the big news was he was dead.

"Just to set the record straight, I'm not dying, and I'm in good health," he said.

When it comes to performing, Brooks needs to be in good health to be able to run around the stage with all that energy.

"Each show needs to be the best, because it could be your last," he said.

"I want the fans to walk away saying it doesn't get any better than this, but it did get better because there was something extra or different from the last time," he said.

Enrollment center to relocate

Stephanie Schmutz
staff reporter

The Enrollment Center in Willard Hall is scheduled to make its new home in Anderson Hall.

"We're still working on the exact date for the move," Don Foster, registrar, said. "It largely depends on the progress of the Student Information Access System."

The new SIAS is made up of many parts, including Touch Tone, Kiosk and the World Wide Web.

Kiosk is similar to using a bank machine. Students will be able to access information by using their student identifications.

Anything from grades to campus maps will be accessible through this system as well as the World Wide Web.

Not only will students be able to access information independently, but they will be able to enroll over the phone with Touch Tone.

Plans for the system are moving quickly.

"We hope to have SIAS up and running for the spring '97 semester," Foster said. "That means if all goes as planned, students will have access by November of this year."

The upcoming changes will benefit both the registrar's office and the student body.

"Our goal is to make transactions easier for students so they are able to concentrate on real issues — their education," Foster said.

Gunile DeVault, associate registrar, said the change will allow for better management for the office.

"It's difficult to supervise people

Car strikes student at 17th, Laramie

John Berggren
staff writer

A student is in critical condition after being struck by a vehicle at the intersection of Laramie and 17th streets.

At 1:47 Friday morning, Alex Dill, junior in horticulture, was walking home from a night out in Aggieville. While crossing west at the intersection he was hit by a vehicle heading south on 17th Street.

Dill was taken from the scene of the accident by Riley County EMS to the Saint Mary Hospital. He was later transferred to St. Francis Regional Medical Center via LifeStar helicopter for treatment of head injuries sustained from the accident. Dill is now listed in critical condition with severe trauma to the head.

The driver of the vehicle, Jose J. Lopez, left the scene of the accident but later turned himself in to authorities at the Riley County Police Department.

There was one witness to the accident. Darren Hunter,

► JAVA ESPRESSO AND BAKERY TO REMAIN OPEN DESPITE RUMORS

Java Espresso and Bakery, 1119 Moro Ave., was set to close its doors for business at midnight Sunday. But manager Jean Riffel said it is open and will remain open. Employees began hearing rumors about the planned closing from customers and fellow employees late in the week.

Ben Cartwright, freshman in humanities and a baker for Java, heard about the possible loss of his job from a fellow employee.

"The employees are really like a family there," Cartwright said. "We are close and dedicated to each other."

According to employees, Riffel planned to close Java for both business and personal reasons.

"We found out about it, not from her, but from other employees on Thursday," Cartwright said. "The owner wasn't officially going to tell anyone until Saturday."

The lack of communication between the management and employees left the employees to speculate about reasons for the closing.

"Java was planning to close down for financial and personal reasons," Cartwright said. "It wasn't doing well enough, and she (Riffel) was afraid she wouldn't make enough money in the summer to keep it open."

The more than 20 Java employees, most of whom are students or recent K-State graduates, would have been looking for a job this morning.

According to employees, Kent Dean, owner of Dean Liquor at 12th and Laramie streets in Aggieville, has approached Riffel with an offer that will allow the business to keep its doors open.

Dean met with employees last night to go over some of the specifics.

"We've heard that he wants to offer more sophisticated drinks and different coffees," Cartwright said. "He could bring more variety, and that could be an overall positive for the business."

The deal is not finalized, Riffel said.

Dean said he has no involvement in Java and he does not plan to. He did say, however, that the coffee shop would continue.

"Java's not going down. It's keeping its regular hours," he said.

Riffel said, "All I want said is that Java will be open and will remain open."

► AWARD-WINNING ROYAL PURPLE TO DISTRIBUTE YEARBOOKS TODAY

"Common Core" is the theme of the 1996 Royal Purple that will begin distribution today.

Pre-purchased yearbooks can be picked up from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. today through Wednesday in the Union free-speech zone.

"We'll be distributing books out of a semi-truck parked between the Union and Seaton," Sarah Kallenbach, Royal Purple editor, said.

The 1995 edition won the Columbia Scholastic Press Association Gold Crown Award as well as the Associated College Press Pacemaker Award.

"K-State is the only school in the nation to win these awards six times in a row," Kallenbach said. "We're pretty proud of that."

Long hours and hard work can be attributed to the production of the Royal Purple.

"We have six deadlines from October to March," Kallenbach said. "During those times, we put in about 40 hours a week between classes and in the evenings."

The Royal Purple staff sold 4,000 books during fall registration and throughout the school year.

"We purchased 4,750 books, and extras will be sold at next year's registration and available over the summer," Kallenbach said.

Students who already purchased yearbooks can pick them up during the next three days.

"If they have their receipt that would be great, but we will accept a student ID," Kallenbach said.

The Royal Purple staff consists of 12 students.

"We work so hard on the book for the students," Kallenbach said. "I hope students are happy with the changes and like what we have done."

Students can also pick up their pre-purchased books in Kedzie 103 after Wednesday.

"We'll keep the books available until August, and then they will go on sale," Kallenbach said. "We can't guarantee them after that date."

► MIDEAST CALLS FOR CEASE-FIRE

QANA, Lebanon (AP) — Tens of thousands of refugees streamed home to southern Lebanon Saturday after a U.S.-brokered cease-fire silenced the guns in the 16-day, Israel-Hezbollah war.

Barely minutes after the truce went into effect at 4 a.m., hundreds of buses, vans and cars were crawling bumper-to-bumper, packed with many of the 500,000 refugees and their belongings.

The Beirut-Tyre coastal highway, a favorite target of Israeli gunboats during the fighting, was almost all one-way traffic — south-bound.

"We are returning. All of us are resistance," said leaflets that guerrillas of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah handed out to the motorists.

► SMOKELESS CIGARETTE ARRIVES

WASHINGTON (AP) — R.J. Reynolds attorney Charles Blixt smoked 20 Eclipse cigarettes, tapping them onto an ashtray as RJR unveiled its long-promised "smokeless" cigarette at a closed-door meeting with leading tobacco critics.

Skeptical, Dr. Michael Cummings peered into the ashtray — and saw no ash.

Cummings isn't convinced Eclipse is a safer cigarette, but with that ashtray, RJR got his attention.

"It was amazing to see," said Cummings, of the Roswell Park Cancer Center.

That private meeting April 12 at RJR's headquarters has some anti-smokers crying foul, fearing the tobacco giant could defuse criticism of its new cigarette by co-opting anti-tobacco scientists.

Kappa Kappa Psi fraternity wins $1,000 at annual step show

Marci McNeal
staff reporter

Clapping hands, stomping feet and grinding bodies filled Ahearn Field House at the second-annual Phurious Phi-Day StompDown.

Phi Beta Sigma fraternity sponsored the event Saturday.

Four groups of men and women participated in the event.

"We had three groups of participants drop out about an hour before the competition was supposed to begin," said Jerome Stokes, president of Phi Beta Sigma and senior in psychology.

Stokes said he was disappointed by the cancellations.

But, he said, there was nothing he could do that close to the start of the show.

"We had two rounds of competition," Stokes said. "We had an exhibition round and the competition round, which had a $1,000 first prize."

The K-State chapters of the Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority and the Phi Beta Sigma fraternity performed their step routines in the exhibition round.

The Phi Beta Sigmas were the sponsors of the event and therefore could not compete for the prize money.

The Alpha Kappa Alphas competed in the exhibition round for another reason.

"We wanted to compete in the exhibition round so we could introduce the newest ladies of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority incorporated of spring of 1996," said Lori McDonald, member of the AKA sorority and senior in criminology and pre-health management.

The second round of competition pitted the Phi Beta Sigma fraternity from Kansas Wesleyan University in Salina and the Kappa Kappa Psi fraternity from Langston University in Oklahoma against each other for the $1,000 first prize.

Eight judges, who included one undergraduate student from each black fraternity and sorority on campus, determined the Kappa Kappa Psi fraternity the winner of the competition.

"The Kappa Kappa Psi's level of difficulty was outstanding, and I was very impressed with the creativity of their routine," said Jaimee Demby, judge representing the AKA sorority and junior in social work.

The step show drew a crowd of about 500 people, including a group of students who traveled from Langston, Okla.

"We came to support our guys who stepped tonight," Pamela Stevens of Langston University said. "They by far were the best ones here, and the judges confirmed that by giving them first place."

The step show was dedicated to the memory of Richard Kilpatrick.

"Kilpatrick was a fraternity brother who died of cancer in 1991," Stokes said.

Stokes said all the proceeds from the step show will go to the American Cancer Society and the Richard Kilpatrick Scholarship Fund.

"It's important to have step show competitions to be able to showcase each fraternity and sorority's talents," Stokes said.

Stokes said stomp downs started back in Africa as a tribal dance and evolved into step shows by black fraternities who wanted a way to distinguish themselves from other greek organizations.

► EARTH DAY

Speaker to discuss environmental issues

AbdullNaser T. Abdullah
staff reporter

K-State will conclude Earth Day 1996 celebrations tonight with a speech from an official from the Environmental Protection Agency.

Richard Moore, chairman of the National Environmental Justice Council for the EPA, will speak about "Race, Class and the Environment" at 7 p.m. in Union Forum Hall.

"The topic is environmental justice," Robert Wilson, president of Students for Sustainability, said.

Environmental justice issues have moved to the forefront of environmental issues within the last few years, Wilson said.

"Environmental justice issues concern, for example, the locating of a toxic-waste dump or hazardous facilities in lower-income or minority neighborhoods," Wilson said.

These kinds of neighborhoods do not have the political influence to fight such issues, he said.

"Generally, that's what he'll be talking about," Wilson said.

Moore is the recipient of the Miguel Trujillo Unsung Hero Award, New Mexico's highest human-rights honor.

Moore is also the coordinator of the Southwest Network for Environmental and Economic Justice, a coalition of 70 groups in California, Mexico and the Southwest.

The speech is free and open to the public, Wilson said.

Ceremony honors new addition to Linear Trail

Gina Garvin
staff reporter

Walkers, joggers and bicyclists can now experience the entire Linear Park Trail, which was dedicated Saturday.

Manhattan residents participated in the trail dedication by walking the new six-mile portion. The participants walked from the south shelter of Anneberg Lake to the Holiday Inn for the dedication ceremonies.

After the dedication, some people returned to the shelter to complete the six-mile trek.

The dedication included a ribbon-cutting ceremony and a list of distinguished speakers, including Mayor Sydney Carlin; Marie Steichen, chair of the parks and recreation advisory board; Nancy Denning, former city commissioner; and John Strickler, who helped develop the Quality of Life Bond Issue, which funded the Linear Park Trail.

"This trail is a celebration of a vision of hard work that was transformed into what is seen today," Steichen said.

Each speaker expressed the idea of the vision of the trail, because it is something all Manhattan residents worked on and should be proud of.

One of the individuals contributing to the development of the trail was Terry DeWeese, director of parks and recreation, who helped develop the vision into what the trail is today.

"This trail helps to increase awareness of Kansas residents to the natural beauty of our state," Strickler said.

The ceremony ended with a ribbon cutting and the unveiling of the new Linear Park sign, which includes history and a map of the trail.

Debbie Dugan, parks and recreation, said she enjoyed the trail.

"The trail was really scenic, and I especially enjoyed the beautiful bridge at the back of the trail," Dugan said.

Educate yourself by attending Landon Lecture

QUICKread

► The 106th Landon Lecture will be delivered by Henry Kissinger at 11 a.m. in Bramlage Coliseum. Students should take the opportunity to hear his lecture.

Students will have the opportunity today to hear one of the most influential foreign policy advisers in this century. Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger will deliver the 106th Landon Lecture at 11 a.m. in Bramlage Coliseum.

Kissinger served in the position from 1973 to 1977. He was chief foreign policy adviser and secretary of state to presidents Nixon and Ford.

During his tenure as secretary of state, Kissinger helped in the signing of the first strategic arms limitation agreement and the withdrawing of American troops from Vietnam.

Kissinger was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1973 for his role in negotiating a cease-fire in Vietnam. In addition, he received the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1977 and the Medal of Liberty in 1986.

After retiring as secretary of state, Kissinger remained active as a commentator on foreign affairs, a teacher and a consultant.

He has also written many books, including his memoirs "Years of Upheaval" and "White House Years." One of his most recent books, "Diplomacy," is dedicated to the members of foreign service.

To many, Kissinger is a national figure worthy of respect. Others believe many of the decisions he made concerning Vietnam were wrong.

Go out and see for yourself. Whether you agree with Kissinger's views, it is still a chance to hear a national speaker and educate yourself about U.S. foreign relations.

The Landon Lecture Series is a great opportunity to hear national figures speak. Do not miss this one.

Toys of our childhood

Some of the fun of being a parent is the toys. As a parent, it is cool, and even encouraged, if you play with toys. You cannot be sure a toy is safe for your child if you do not play with it first.

Even among college students I often hear the phrase, "We never had cool stuff like that when I was a kid."

Most of the toys we had as children are still around. Some of the time they are made from cheaper materials or are not as big as we remember, but the classic toys still remain.

The best times I remember as a child involved toys I made myself, rather than the toys that came from Grandma's car or Santa's bag. Everyone can remember when your house got a new refrigerator or washing machine. You would play in the box until it was a lump of brown corrugated mush.

The other toys we had as children were a bit warped when you look back on it. My first exhibit: the Sit 'n Spin. In case you forgot what one is, let me refresh your memory. The Sit 'n Spin is a device on which you sit and then spin until you are too dizzy to hold on, or until you get sick. You sit on a round base. You wrap your legs around a center piece that looks like a table for midgets and then pull yourself around and around and around.

What sick mind created that? Was there some executive board meeting at Playskool with men in suits?

"Let's create a toy that makes children dizzy and ill. Something cheap and plastic."

"Yeah, with pretty colors."

"They'll spin until they vomit."

"Ha, ha, ha, ha, ha."

My second example is the ever-popular, always mysterious Sea Monkeys. What are Sea Monkeys? Someone here in the newsroom thinks Sea Monkeys were actually seaweed, but I was under the impression they were some kind of shrimp. Whatever they were, I guess they were royalty

Myview

MARY RENEE Smith

AMAZING LIVE

because they were always wearing crowns and carrying scepters in the ads.

And what about the Slinky? This toy is actually a wound up, well-cut piece of metal. You could never get it to do the things it would do in the commercial. Slinky was the first toy that taught me you cannot believe everything you see on television. I guess, in a round-about way, Slinky was an important toy in my life.

Silly Putty was another toy that did not live up to my expectations. Silly Putty is not actually a toy, but it is something you play with, so I can complain about it here.

I liked Silly Putty at first. It was fun to copy the funny pages onto that little pink blob of wanna-be plastic. After a few strips of Peanuts, however, the Silly Putty did not ever look the same again. It turned gray and nasty.

I always wanted to chew it like bubble gum, and Mom would never let me put it in my mouth. Leave it to moms to take all the fun out of a toy.

The toy college students still play with — and might find more fun now than when they were younger — is Twister. I think we all have our own ideas about how this game was invented. Simple idea actually, spin the wheel for a color and a body part and let the fun begin. In my teen years there was something fun and forbidden about being twisted up with Phillip Stevens at a party, even if it was not my fault I got blue, left hand.

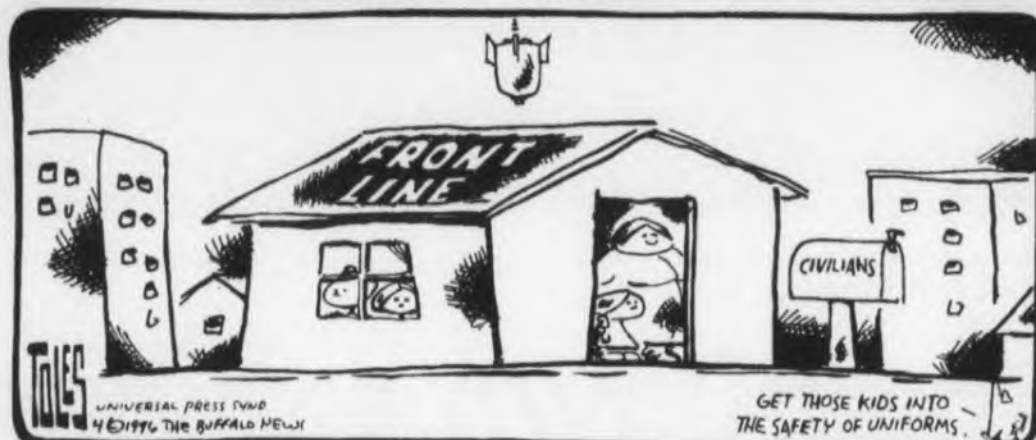

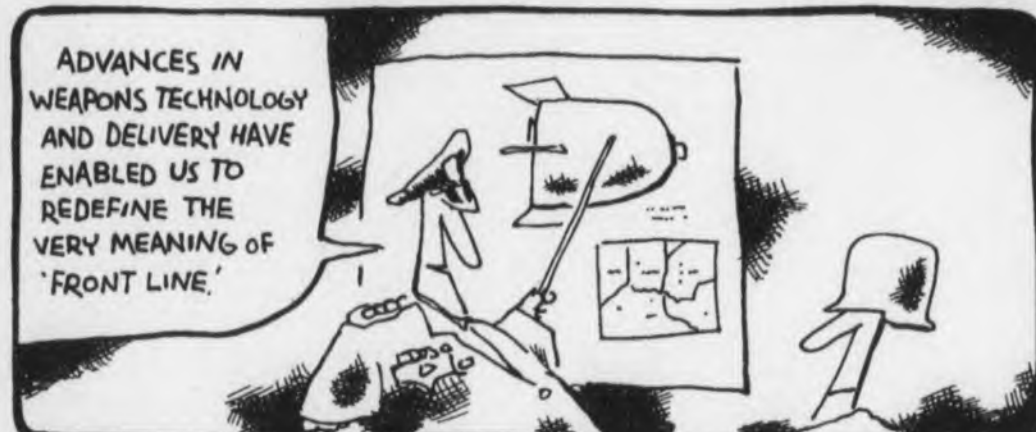

Most of our favorite toys were not high-tech and expensive, but toys that allowed us to use our imaginations and play with our friends.

The flying discs and soccer balls you see in the open areas around campus today are reflections of our recapturing our childhood.

We are all just children at heart.

Encountering alien life

I do not think I have ever seen a UFO. Usually, when people start talking about UFOs, my bullshit detector starts ringing as loudly as it does when people start yakking about Christ.

I mean, just how likely is it aliens are cruising around the planet and screwing with people on the sly? If they were visiting us, you would think they could get a lot more mileage out of starting their own late-night talk shows or something. If Mr. Invader teaches us anything, it is that aliens are hip right now.

I tend to agree with the people who think UFO sightings are mostly hoaxes, tricks of the light or man-made vehicles.

Maybe my skepticism is extreme. After all, lots of people have seen aliens popping out of those UFOs or claim to have met aliens on the inside of the UFOs. We just do not believe them.

That is what I find weird. If we put 10 people on a witness stand, and they all swear they saw Joe shoot Bob in the head, Joe could go to the electric chair on the basis of that testimony.

If those same 10 people say they saw a UFO, we would not believe them.

We are willing to trust people's testimony in a life or death situation, but when they claim to have seen little blue men, we think they are crackpots or at least so confused they were fooled.

And why? Because we have already decided UFOs do not exist.

This is not a new phenomenon. Historians trust 12th century monks to accurately report this or that king was assassinated on such and such a day. On the next page when the monk starts talking about a miracle he witnessed, that part of his testimony is discounted.

Why? Because miracles do not happen.

Of course, I could be missing the boat on this UFO thing. Maybe people are a lot less skeptical than I am.

I am not exactly a UFO buff. Sure, I have heard of Roswell. I have seen "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

I do not watch shows like "Sightings," and I can count the episodes of "The X-Files" I have seen on one hand, minus a thumb. I am totally out of touch with whatever the popular beliefs are about UFOs.

Maybe everybody believes in UFOs these days, except for the people who make careers out of debunking them.

I am afraid, though, that regardless of the true nature (or non-nature) of UFOs, people will project their own weirdness onto whatever their UFO experiences are.

I saw one woman on television who claims she was abducted by aliens. They studied her physiology and gave her a message of brotherly love. Now, she says, she feels much more in tune with the earth and with humanity. It was like a religious experience.

It is the religion part that spooks me. If aliens were visiting us, some of the contactees are inevitably going to deify the little guys. And who knows if they are actually friendly?

Here is what I do know about UFO sightings:

Abduction stories, although popular right now, are a very small percentage of all UFO sightings, and they usually do not end with messages of brotherly love.

Lots of UFO "contacts" end up with the contactee being cooked from the inside-out by radiation poisoning. Negative types of UFO contacts are more common, I would say, than ones which you would want to start a religion or social movement around.

Most UFO contacts are not good or bad. They are just plain weird.

One guy had a UFO land outside his house. The little blue men entered his house and, without saying a word, served him tasty buttermilk pancakes.

One woman met some very tall people from a UFO who, in our own sign language (which she understood, being a tutor for the deaf), asked her if they could shave her head. She said OK, and they did. They flew off, leaving her with all of her hair in her hands.

These are weird stories, but, as far as I can tell, they are much more representative of UFO contacts than these fruity abduction stories.

Maybe aliens do exist, and really they just get off on playing pranks on us.

Maybe UFOs are just the modern manifestation of high weirdness that has always plagued humans. Maybe what we used to call miracles, now we just call UFOs.

Either way, we should be highly suspect of anyone who claims to know what is really going on, whether it is the guy who says aliens told him what they were doing, or the guy who claims UFOs are angels in disguise or the guy who says they are all just mass hallucinations.

None of those people know any more than you or I. They just think they do. If they persist in bugging you, punch 'em in the nose.

TAKE AN INTEREST IN NATIVE AMERICAN CULTURE

Editor,

I am an international student and a journalist from a developing country (India). As such, when I heard about the seventh-annual powwow of the Native Americans of this region, I was interested in attending it. I was surprised to meet a small group of girls from Wichita who did not belong to this community but were nevertheless participating in the festivities.

But what saddened me was that they were the exception rather than the rule.

In general, the impression I have gathered during the nine months I have been here is few people from the rest of the United States seem to have any interest in this culture and community.

Considering this is such a large University, one would have expected a moderate turnout of students. But this was not the case. That is really sad, because even though the days when this culture thrived in the New World are long gone, this country can still learn a lot from their lifestyle, which was so attuned to the environment, to nature and its rhythms.

I hope the readers take this letter in the right spirit. I have a great appreciation of many aspects of this country, and it saddens me that young people do not seem to value their joint heritage. It is interaction between different cultures that keeps a country rich in diversity.

COLLEGIAN SHOULD STOP PRINTING ITS OPINIONS

Editor,

One of the great things about this country is the First Amendment which guarantees us the right to voice our opinions. One of the great things about this newspaper is it provides each of us a forum in which we can publicly display our opinions.

However, there is one fault I see in this particular newspaper: It voices its opinion. The problem that I see lies in the fact the Collegian is subsidized by every student on campus through the Student Publications fee.

Granted, a disclaimer is printed: "Editorials are a majority opinion of the members of the board." Regardless, the printed opinion is published at the expense of all students, even if they disagree with the opinion.

If the Collegian were privately owned and supported purely by generated profits, that would be a different story. In that case, as a voluntary subscriber, we could drop the fee at any time. Conversely, we are forced to pay for the Collegian when we enroll.

When the board publishes its opinion, it represents the opinion of 20,000 students. I guarantee this representation is false 100 percent of the time.

The danger of this practice comes when Student Governing Association and city and state officials read these opinions and use them as a basis for making legislative decisions. Unfortunately, with the high degree of voter apathy, our officials cannot be blamed for using this opinion, because it is often the only opinion voiced.

I would respectfully ask the Collegian Editorial Board to cease this practice at once. Please do as the rest of us and write your personal opinions as individuals. Otherwise, discontinue the mandatory Student Publication fee which supports this practice.

COLUMNIST DOESN'T HAVE GOOD IDEAS FOR EARTH

Editor,
I disagree with Jason Hamilton's views that he haphazardly presented in his April 22 column "Environmental idiots, back off." His statement that EarthFirst people claim, "the earth and all the individual parts that make it up are more important than humanity" is a contradiction of itself.

Humanity is a part of the earth (at least I believe I was living on this planet the last time I checked), so how can I be more important than something I am already a part of?

A part of the whole cannot be greater than the whole itself.

I believe EarthFirst people do not necessarily believe humanity is less important than other organisms on the earth, but everything living on the earth has some importance.

Some people might believe the earth does not solely belong to humans, because humans are not the only thing using the earth. Humans and other organisms on the earth are similar in one important aspect. We all need the earth and its resources to survive. The earth and its resources include all organisms, even humans. Humans do not have ownership of something they can neither completely control, singly use nor survive without.

When humans can control or even predict the weather, I want to be the first to know about it.

Jason's statement that "most animals are not very social" is completely false. Many animals are more social than most humans are. Many social ants, bees and termites have dominated certain areas of the earth for centuries because their ability to work in a social community. Animals do not have to communicate, work and live with humans to be considered social animals.

Some humans do not understand how other organisms work in their communities, but that does not mean that they do not form social communities. They reproduce, build homes and eat just like humans do in order to survive.

Jason's view that the only way to preserve the earth is "to expand part of our operation into space" is unrealistic.

His idea to just "build nuclear reactors on the moon," goes to show that he does not think much about the earth he lives on and is definitely not much of a scientist.

You would have no way of transferring the energy produced in the nuclear plants from the moon to the earth efficiently. It requires energy to transfer the energy to the earth from the moon.

Humans are faced with many environmental problems much greater than worrying about nuclear meltdown.

I think Jason needs to reevaluate the ways he plans to preserve the biosphere. He can start by taking a course in ecology, so he can understand that an ecosystem is not the same thing as the biosphere.

Maybe next Earth Day a non-extremist will actually have something important to say so we can be proud of the earth we live on.

ARTICLE WAS YELLOW JOURNALISM AT BEST

Editor,
I am writing to express my complete disgust with the article and editorial concerning David Damon that appeared in Friday's Collegian.

What I am upset about is Shana Newell didn't bother to get any facts together before writing her negative article. If someone had just shown me that article and not told me what it was in, I would have guessed the National Enquirer, not the Collegian. I expect better journalism on the sports page.

Next time, why don't you get football coach Bill Snyder's comment or wait for a comment from K-State Sports Information before writing your trash?

I realize it was probably nice to be able to write a story without bothering to do any research.

Of course, then the editorial section has to take its cheap shot, too. Of course, you hide behind the word editorial instead of signing your name to an article.

What Damon did is wrong, there is no doubt about that.

What I am upset about is the way the Collegian handled this. I have complete faith in Snyder, that he will handle any problems from his football players. Of course Newell doesn't know if Damon is on the team or not. Snyder is one of the most moral men in America. The punishment he deals out to his players is worse than that of any court. K-State is so lucky to have a coach of his caliber.

My suggestion to Newell is to let Snyder handle his football team as he takes us to the national championship this year, and maybe you can go cover some intramural softball.

TOLES DEPICTS BAD IMAGE OF TURF-CARE INDUSTRY

Editor,
I am writing in response to the Toles cartoon in the April 22 Collegian.

I object to the portrayal of the turf-care industry. No one in this business appreciates the Collegian presenting us in this light. I myself don't have much respect for your slandering, and often misleading, vocation of journalism. Wildlife and the environment are my number one concerns, and they determine my approach toward turf management.

We as future turf professionals share a basic goal: to improve the quality of our lives and the environment.

K-State has given turf students the education and training to properly select and apply turf care products that will improve the landscape for down.

the benefits of people, pets and the environment.

By providing healthy, denser turf, we improve and protect the quality of our environment. Healthy turf filters out pollutants, cools air, produces oxygen and absorbs carbon dioxide helping to reduce global warming. Healthy turf also reduces erosion of valuable topsoil and filters water before returning it to ground water supplies.

Turf-care products must undergo years of research before they are available to the industry.

EPA reviews each product carefully before releasing a registration and allowing it to be applied. By using turf-care professionals, you can greatly reduce your chance of accidental spill or improper applications which results in a healthier and safer environment.

Please help give our industry a better name by recognizing our achievements and goals.

Let's work together to become active environmentalists instead of environmental activists.

KEEP FACTS IN MIND DURING KISSINGER'S LECTURE

Editor,
The most notable of American diplomats, Henry Kissinger, will be lecturing on this campus, and it is appropriate we reflect back on his public career.

It is ironic a man so instrumental in conducting a war that killed 2 million Vietnamese civilians, as well as 1.1 million North and South revolutionary fighters, 600,000 innocent Cambodians, tens of thousands of Laotians and nearly 60,000 Americans, received the Nobel Peace Prize for his efforts to end it. Kissinger's role in the war and the signing of the Paris Peace Agreement are stark contradictions to my conventional definitions of a person of peace.

It was Kissinger acting as secretary of state under the Nixon administration who gave full support of the bombing of Cambodia, telling his National Security Council staff to keep it a secret from the American public.

The apparent goal of this operation was to attack North Vietnamese guerrillas operating in unpopulated areas of Cambodia.

However, the Cambodian government repeatedly issued statements during the bombings that the areas being attacked were indeed populated.

This was confirmed when American press corps members were led into Cambodia to find the bombings were directed at heavily populated areas and there were not Vietnamese resistance fighters among the bodies or otherwise among the living. The CIA conservatively estimates the death toll at 600,000.

It was also Kissinger who refused to sign the Paris Peace Agreement in October 1972, stating the agreement was unsatisfactory for the U.S. position.

He held off signing the document, instead waiting until after the '72 elections so that Nixon would not be given a "credibility problem" for a sudden withdrawal.

When Hanoi refuse to negotiate its position after the election, Kissinger and his associates conducted massive December bombings on Northern cities to put the agreement in terms more favorable to the United States. Neither NATO allies, nor the world for that matter, gave support to the bombings.

The agreement was finally signed in January 1973, and if one were to compare it to the October plan, precious little was changed. In fact, most of the second document is word for word with the first, creating serious questions of the legitimacy of the December attacks.

Immediately after the signing of the Paris Agreement, Kissinger gave the American public his rendition of it, which not surprisingly omitted the central points of the plan. Absent from his interpretation were Vietnamese rights for self-determination and autonomy; essentially gone were any chances for legitimate democracy.

According to Kissinger and Nixon, the constitution under the oppressive U.S.-puppet regime (GVN) must have stayed intact, as well as the GVN would remain the legitimate ruler, with the National Liberation Front (NLF) not being given equal status as required under the agreement.

Kissinger reportedly said "an armed GVN would be able to deal with moderate violations of the agreement." Kissinger did find the audacity to accept the Nobel Peace Prize in late 1973, even though co-nominee Le Duc Tho refused it, presumably because the cease fire was in shambles.

Although it is not yet known what Kissinger will speak about, it is likely he will discuss China and Taiwan, considering he is a media-aggrandized pundit on U.S.-China relations. We should be careful to accept his opinions on the issue however, as his analysis is very construed.

Kissinger and Associates, Kissinger's consulting firm, represents nearly 30 multinational corporations with Chinese investments, including Lockheed, American Express and ITT.

"You can't just take away someone's future for a mistake they made. It's not like Phillips is not paying for what he has done."

RODGER HATFIELD

"I object to the portrayal of the turf-care industry. No one in the business appreciates the Collegian presenting us in this light."

Perhaps this was his influence when he said of the slaughter of students in 1989 that "no government in the world would have tolerated having the main square of its capitol occupied for eight weeks by tens of thousands of demonstrators."

Kissinger has always gone the extra step for "peace."

The atrocities listed above are by no means exhaustive. Kissinger played key roles in the support of the Indonesian genocidal war against East Timor. He also advised President Reagan on issues concerning Central and South America, which included death squads in support of dictators in order to preserve "democracy."

More, his policies concerning the Middle East are questionable. When he gives us his opinion of the world on Monday, we should keep these in mind.

SPORTS FIGURES SHOULD BE FORGIVEN FOR WRONGS

(April 22 Collegian, sports column) is right. Lawrence Phillips should not be allowed to play professional football. In fact, I would go even further than that. I think that a permanent injunction should be filed against him to prevent him from ever getting a job anywhere.

Oh, but not just him. Every person who has ever done something wrong should be exiled from the world of sports for life; guys like Scottie Pippen, Dennis Rodman, Mike Tyson, Warren Moon, Darrel Strawberry and Otis Nixon. Need I go on?

None of these people should be allowed in the world of professional sports — they have all done something that is against the law. But wait — we cannot have a guy like Phillips procreating. He should be castrated. We would not want to have a bunch of little Lawrences and Lawrencettes dragging people around by the hair.

I think everyone is missing the point. You can't just take away someone's future for a mistake they made. It's not like Phillips is not paying for what he has done. He is on probation, he is in counseling, he has gone through God knows how many psychological evaluations, and he has been under public scrutiny ever since the event occurred.

I think you have to make examples of these people, but not in the way prescribed by Simmons.

Offenders such as this should go out and speak to other young athletes and try to encourage them to go about things properly; they should try to become positive role models. I think it's pretty evident that simply outlawing actions like this and then trying to punish offenders is simply not working.

■ According to the Associated Press, the basket of flowers that Cincinnati Reds owner Marge Schott sent to umpires in sympathy of John McSherry's death was recycled, the Dayton Daily News reported Sunday. Schott scribbled a sympathy note, attached it to flowers that had been given to her on opening day by the team's television affiliate, and had them sent to the umpires' dressing room, the paper reported. The newspaper cited two unidentified sources for its report. A phone call to Schott's home by AP Sunday went unanswered.

Youth dominate spring game

■ Injuries allow younger players to display their talents on the gridiron

Dan Lewerenz
contributing writer

Spring has sprung. And in the minds of K-State football fans, football season has begun with the playing of the spring game Saturday. The first-string players defeated the second string, 49-6.

Senior quarterback Brian Kavanagh showed he is ready to take over the Wildcats by throwing five touchdown passes. The Holiday Bowl MVP found four different receivers in the end zone, including a 55-yard strike by junior Andre Anderson, one of Anderson's two scores.

Three young running backs showed their wares, with juniors Eric Hickson and Mike Lawrence scoring touchdowns and sophomore Marlon Charles racking up a game-high 109 yards on 22 carries.

"I like the competition we've got at the running back spot," Coach Bill Snyder said.

"We have proven backs, but Marlon Charles will fit into that mix. It's going to be a three-guy race. They're all capable of being our best back. I like that position right now. It's well fortified."

In an effort to utilize as much of that talent as possible, Snyder experimented with Lawrence at receiver, both in the slot and wide-out. "If you're going to be doing any experiments, this is the time to do it," Snyder said.

"It's easy to see we've got some very fine running backs. Mike is a very fine running back. Eric Hickson is a fine running back. You can see Marlon Charles can bring some excitement to the game as well. It doesn't do any good when they're all sitting next to me. They're all good athletes, and we want to get them on the field."

On defense, the Cats saw the addition of junior Demetric Denmark to the all-star backfield of junior Chris Canty and seniors Joe Gordon and Mario Smith.

"I think this is going to be a watermark year for Demetric," Snyder said. "He's an exciting young guy, and he's learning his way as a defensive back. He runs awfully well, and he's got excellent speed."

A newcomer also played a big role on the defensive line, where freshman Darren Howard stepped in with seven tackles to help seniors Andrew Timmons and Nyle Wiren, who had seven and four tackles, respectively.

Youth prevailed among the linebackers, where returning starter Travis Ochs sat out with a minor injury and senior DeShawn Fogle left the game early after a jarring head shot.

Freshman Mark Simoneau recorded a team-high 13 tackles from the middle linebacker position.

"Mark has a chance to be an excellent linebacker," defensive coordinator Bob Cope said.

"But he's like young players in he has a problem of losing his focus. He has speed. He's strong. He's tough, but he needs to become more consistent."

If you're going to be doing any experiments, this is the time to do it.

Hawks end netters' hopes for final conference title

Shane McCormick
contributing writer

The K-State women's tennis team ended a two-match losing streak Friday by defeating Colorado 4-2 in the Big 8 Tournament.

That is the good news.

The bad news is the Wildcats' winning streak was short-lived as they conceded a 4-0 decision to Kansas.

The last win for the Cats came more than two weeks ago against the very same Buffaloes in Boulder, Colo. Unlike the previous match against the Buffaloes, the Cats were unable to take the doubles point.

K-State had swept all three doubles matches in the meeting in Boulder.

Coach Steve Bietau said he was not surprised Colorado took the doubles point.

"Anything can happen with those pro-sets in the doubles competition. They go so fast," he said.

"If you make some mistakes in those sets, they can cost you the match."

But the Cats were able to come back in the singles competition, taking four out of five matches.

"After we lost the doubles point, there was pressure on everyone in the singles competition," Bietau said. "I was proud of our players' performances in the singles matches."

Playing at the No. 2 spot, sophomore Yana Dorodnova won the deciding fourth match.

After taking the first set over Karen McIntosh 6-3, Dorodnova dropped the second 1-6. Dorodnova was able to come back in the third to take the set 6-2.

"Yana did a great job of taking command in her singles competition and pulling off the win," Bietau said.

The Jayhawks swept the doubles matches and took the necessary three singles victories over the Cats.

Despite the 4-0 defeat to Kansas, Bietau said the loss does not overshadow the good play against Colorado.

"They are two separate matches, so it doesn't really overshadow our earlier victory," he said.

"But our players are still really disappointed with the loss to Kansas."

K-State will wait and see if its postseason play will continue with an invitation to the NCAA Regionals, May 3-5. The announcement will come late tonight.

Smith now No. 2 quarterback

■ Still recovering from illness, Cody Lee Smith is rusty, but Snyder remains confident

John Berggren
staff writer

It was over a year in the waiting for Cody Lee Smith. K-State fans have to be saying to themselves that the wait was worthwhile.

Smith saw his first open-to-the-public action in the Wildcats' spring game Saturday. It was last February when Smith first signed at K-State as a junior college transfer from Mt. San Antonio junior college.

Smith missed last season with a stomach ailment that left him unable to participate even in practice.

Saturday's spring game marks only the 15th practice for Smith as a Cat.

Smith came into the season listed as the No. 3 quarterback on the roster, but as of the spring game Smith has jumped up to the backup spot behind Holiday Bowl MVP Brian Kavanagh.

Smith was 19-of-32 passing on the day for 167 yards. Possibly the biggest surprise on the day was Smith's ability to avoid the rush that was put on by the first-string defense.

Coach Bill Snyder said he was happy with Smith's overall play.

"I thought Cody was a little sloppy today," Snyder said. "He's young, and he hasn't completely learned our system. One thing is apparent, and that is he's a very fine athlete, and he can run around and make people miss him in the pocket."

"There were times during the first half of the ballgame when he did a nice job. He was patient and threw the ball underneath. He was pretty accurate, and you can see he can throw the ball fairly well."

Even with the mistakes Smith made on the day, Snyder was still optimistic on Smith's future at K-State.

"All those mistakes he made today are mistakes that I know we can correct," Snyder said. "We've never had a problem being able to get a young guy to settle down and play a position in our system."

"I think it's evident that he's going to be a great player, and it's going to be important for him to have a great summer."

Senior wide receiver Kevin Lockett said the only difference between Kavanagh and Smith was Smith's lack of experience.

"Brian knows every defense people can run. He's seen it all on paper. He's seen it in games, so he knows the system inside and out, and he gets us the plays," Lockett said. "It'll take Cody a little more time to adapt to learning those type of plays. Kavanagh's very comfortable with the system, and it'll just take Cody a little time to get comfortable."

Lockett also said Smith's absence from the field was noticeable.

"You can tell sometimes he's rusty, like he hasn't played in a year or two," Lockett said. "It took him a little bit of time — maybe a week or so — to get into throwing the ball well here in the spring, but he came on, and he's done good."

There were times during the first half of the ballgame when he did a nice job. He was patient and threw the ball underneath. He was pretty accurate, and you can see he can throw the ball fairly well.

K-State basketball coach Tom Asbury announced Friday that Dax Jones, a 7-foot, 250-pound center from Cloud County Community College has signed a letter of intent to play for the Wildcats.

A native of Junction

He shot 49.7 percent from the field, 63.9 percent from the free throw line and led the team with 39 blocked shots.

Before the injury, Jones was averaging 10.8 points and 5.8 rebounds per game while shooting 54.5 percent. Cloud County finished the season with a 27.6 record, losing to Butler County in the Region VI semifinals.

Cats end slide with 4 wins against Hawks

Shana Newell

Stinging from a 24-5 thumping in the first game of a five-game series with intrastate rival Kansas, the K-State baseball team bounced back to win the last four, including a three-game stint this weekend.

"It might have the slap in the face we needed," Coach Mike Clark said. "I'm sure the guys were a little embarrassed. They came back and fought a little harder for the most part."

The Cats defeated Kansas, 4-3, 14-9 and 10-8 in the final three games of the series to guarantee themselves a berth in the Big 8 Tournament next month. But Clark said that doesn't mean the squad can start relaxing yet.

"The fact that we're in (the tournament) doesn't take the pressure off," he said. "Hopefully the guys can keep playing hard and finish out this season on a strong note."

The series was concluded on a high note as the Cats came back from an 8-0 deficit to put 10 runs on the board and chalk up the victory.

"They showed a lot of character this weekend, and you can put an exclamation point next to that character with the way they fought back to win in today's (Sunday's) game," Clark said.

Highlighting the series was a 5-4-3 triple play in Saturday's contest to preserve a tie game and send the Cats into extra innings. Clark said it was the first triple play he's witnessed since he was 6 years old.

"It was great judgment by Todd (Fereday) and a good turn in the middle by Scott (Poepard) to beat out the guy at first. That runner (Isaac Byrd) is fast, and they got him by a step and a half," Clark said.

Clark said the key to the Cats' victories this weekend were Kansas' mistakes.

"They (Kansas) had some troubles defensively, and when they made mistakes, our guys made them pay," he said.

Pitcher Kevin Wicker earned Sunday's win as he improved his record to 4-2. It was his first win since March 10 against Northern Florida. Wicker had been pitching poorly of late, and Clark said the win was good for Wicker's confidence.

"We got off to a great start this season, and Kevin was a big part of that. It was a big, big move today for him to pitch four great innings of two-hit baseball. He had two strikeouts in key situations," Clark said.

And as one of the pitchers who was shelled in Tuesday's massacre, Clark said he was sure it was extra-special for Wicker to help K-State come back and defeat Kansas.

With the wins, K-State improves its overall record to 27-18 and is 11-11 in the conference. The Cats have now won six of their last seven games and have only seven contests remaining, including five conference games.

The Cats return to the diamond Wednesday to play Iowa State in a doubleheader in Ames, Iowa.

Defense dominates Hawks' scrimmage

Associated Press

LAWRENCE — The Kansas defense dominated the annual spring football scrimmage, beating the injury-riddled offensive team 63-25 on Saturday.

The scrimmage lasted 15 series. It was scored by Coach Glen Mason's own system, with points awarded for offensive successes like first downs and touchdowns and defensive stops like turnovers, missed field goals and forced fourth downs.

Led by redshirt freshman quarterback Zac Wegner, the offense started strong, scoring a touchdown on its first possession. An 8-yard pass from Wegner to tight end Brian Gray completed a 75-yard drive.

After that, however, the defense took over, outscoring the offense 50-4 during 11 offensive series before the offense scored another touchdown. That came on a 5-yard pass from Wegner to fullback Eric Galbreath.

It was no surprise that the defense controlled the game.

"Our spring practice has been dominated by the defense," Mason said. "It's looked like the best defense we've had since we've been here."

The defense was led by inside linebacker Jason Thoren and outside linebacker Patrick Brown, who had eight tackles each.

The defense also saw the return of free safety Tony Blevins and linebacker Ronnie Ward, who both missed last season with injuries.

The offense was missing players at almost every position. Ben Rutz, the projected starter at quarterback, did not play because he tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee in practice. Isaac Byrd, KU's top receiver last fall, and running back Eric Vann have spent the spring on the baseball team.

Others missing the scrimmage with injuries were running back Mark Sanders, offensive guard Cleve Roberts and outside linebacker Lamar Sharpe.

On offense, Wegner and transfer quarterback Hamilton Hill combined to go 12-for-29 for 115 yards. Andre Carter had one catch for 32 yards, while Galbreath led the ground game with 10 rushes for 41 yards.

"On offense, we had too many missing players and too much inexperience, but we'll be OK," Mason said.

KC defeats Boston, 9-7

Associated Press

BOSTON — The Boston Red Sox have the worst record in baseball. And any doubt as to whether they have earned that distinction was erased Sunday when they were swept by their closest competitor.

Pinch-hitter Bob Hamelin hit a two-run homer and the Kansas City Royals, who blew a three-run lead in the eighth inning, scored three in the ninth to beat Boston 9-7.

"I've never seen anything like this in my life,"

Boston manager Kevin Kennedy said glumly. "Not this long. Not when you plug one hole and another one opens up. It's awfully hard to believe."

The sinking ship metaphor was especially appropriate for the Red Sox, who dropped to 6-19 after being swept by what had been baseball's second-worst team.

"We've been going through the same thing as the Red Sox. You either have to fight your way out of it or die," Royals manager Bob Boone said.

For the second-consecutive day, the Royals scored in the first inning, getting two singles with two outs before Macfarlane homered into the left-field screen to make it 3-0.

not been convicted of anything else that he had been charged with."

Behind the charges Damon faced, Snyder said another story existed, one that is difficult for a small, Midwestern community like Manhattan to understand.

"There was a family situation. David has a very difficult family life, and basically it's in his immediate family," Snyder said.

"He had some brothers that were involved with some of the things that were addressed, and David's involvement with those things, according to his counsel, was not as it had been alleged."

"He had been arraigned on several of those occasions, and he had not been convicted of anything. All the charges were dismissed against him. There were other family members that certainly suffered from their charges."

Snyder went on to say Damon's lawyer was looking to remove Damon from the environment he was in and felt the opportunity to get an education would be beneficial to Damon.

"He (Damon's lawyer) gave us great reassurance that David could blossom as a student if he were given an opportunity to do that. We asked David to attend a junior college and stipulated that there were some things he needed to do academically before he could join us, and he did that," Snyder said.

As someone who is close to Damon, Snyder said the sophomore is an intelligent and compassionate individual.

"I think if someone were to sit down with David and talk with him point blank, you would find a very friendly, neat guy. He's a remarkably capable young guy. He's made the effort, and there have been times here he's been at least a 3.0 student," Snyder said.

"Probably, from what I hear — I don't know if this is a fact right now because we have been separated from Snyder himself. That trust, Snyder said, leads to honesty.

"David has told me that he is not guilty (of the incident involving sexual battery of another K-State student). I can't comment on that. I can't say that's true or false. I want to believe the things that David has told me, and David is very emphatic about that (his innocence)," Snyder said.

"And if David were to have any disappointments, maybe the one at the top would be whether or not I would believe him. I want to be able to believe David and anybody else who comes to me."

Snyder also commented on the conversation he had with Amy Schulz's mother, Elaine.

"There was commentary on the media that I had called the parents, and I did call."

"It was stated that I was sorry that David did that. I didn't say that I was sorry that David had done a certain thing. What I did say was that I was sorry that anything had taken place to disrupt the life of that young lady. And I am sorry that an event took place to disrupt the life of that young lady."

"But I certainly didn't say that I was sorry for what David did, because at that time I wasn't sure what David did. I did not know. There was a strong belief that he was not guilty of the charge that was brought forth."

"David was charged and had his day in court, and it didn't turn out the way I know he thought it should. So I can have compassion for his situation, and I can have compassion for this young lady. I feel badly that she has the feelings that she has," Snyder said.

A program is in place within the athletic department to educate student athletes about situations such as sexual battery, Snyder said.

That program has three segments. The first is showing numerous videos that address a variety of subjects including date rape and sexual battery. The second segment, Snyder said, is the invitation of guest speakers who speak to student athletes throughout each year on various topics.

"We also have a class to educate student athletes on a variety of subjects. It's a transition class from high school to college for players," Snyder said.

"There's a lot of issues and problems that student athletes have to deal with, so there are a number of things we do to address those issues."

Concertgoers stare at a long line of tractor trailers that are being used to haul everything needed to put on a Garth Brooks concert. Brooks is planning to do two shows in Kansas City this weekend.

Brooks' show thrills thousands of fans with non-stop action

A current of fan excitement roared through Bramlage Coliseum as Garth Brooks strode across stage in his K-State purple football jersey.

"It was so cool seeing him wear something from K-State," Jill Volland, freshman in music theater, said.

Fans responded in different ways while Brooks entertained them Saturday night. Some shouted and whooped, while others screamed out, "We love you, Garth."

"I can't put it into words. The concert was phenomenal, and it was definitely the best concert I've ever attended," said Michelle Fore, junior in economics and American ethnic studies.

Fore waited in line alongside a coliseum of fans for seven to eight hours for a chance to buy tickets to the concert.

"It was worth every second of the wait just to see a concert like this," Fore said.

Many students went to the concert with friends. "I didn't stand in line — my roommate did — but I definitely reaped in the benefits from it," said Danielle Paris, junior in accounting and pre-law.

"It was such an awesome show that I would stand in line another eight hours any day to see him again," Jenny Coalson, freshman undecided, said.

A laser light show introduced Brooks as fans rose to their feet clapping, yelling and screaming before he even appeared on the stage.

"It was a heart-pounding, fast-paced opening, which continued throughout the show," Dan Spindler, senior in architectural engineering, said.

Most fans could not decide on one song Brooks performed that they could call their favorite. "Unanswered Prayers," "Friends in Low Places" and "Thunder Rolls" were all popular with the crowd.

"I liked every song because they all seemed to represent the different values of Garth Brooks," Fore said.

Fans seemed to enjoy the show no matter where they sat, whether close to the floor, behind the stage or at the top of Bramlage. Brooks rotated the entire stage, while he bent down to pick up each and every flower that was thrown on stage, showing each fan was important to him.

"It's good to watch Garth because no matter where you sit he always makes you feel like you're in the front row," Paris said.

Bramlage was filled with affection for the songs and the singer. This overwhelming response was shown each time Brooks tried to leave the stage. Fans screamed and stomped on the floor just to have another opportunity to hear him sing.

"It's hard to find entertainers who entertain, but it's especially hard to find someone who interacts with the audience the way that Garth Brooks does," Volland said.

It was such an awesome show that I would stand in line another eight hours any day to see him again.

JENNY COALSON
FRESHMAN UNDECIDED

Garth Brooks tickets went on sale March 16 for $18.50. Because of the sell-out of the Friday show, Garth agreed to do a Saturday show, which also sold out.

STORY BY GINA GARVIN

Garth Brooks entertains a rowdy crowd during Friday night's concert at Bramlage Coliseum. Brooks did shows at Bramlage Friday and Saturday nights to sold-out crowds.

Brooks brings campfire sing-along to Bramlage, generates 'shameless' cowboy boot stompin' fun

Bramlage Coliseum resembled a big campfire sing-along Friday night.

Garth Brooks said he and his band had a goal to accomplish during the concert — to have as much fun this time as they did four years ago at Bramlage.

After a campfire was placed at center stage, Brian "Chuck" Kennedy and Dan "Rodeo" Roberts opened for Brooks. Strumming their acoustic guitars and singing for about 20 minutes, Chuck and Rodeo pleased the crowd with a song about chewing Copenhagen. Their act, just two cowboys and two guitars, presented contrast to what was to come.

Forty minutes after Chuck and Rodeo left the stage, the lights dimmed, the crowd went wild and a white piano rose from the stage. A man dressed in head-to-toe white sat behind the piano, and the crowd cheered to tell Brooks he was welcome.

But it was not Brooks.

"When the Old Stuff was New" began, Brooks rose out of the piano, and the show was off and running. Literally.

During the two-hour set, Brooks and his band sang, danced and ran all over the stage. It seemed as though the band was playing to every individual in the full house, running to the very edge of the stage on all sides.

The rules for this show were the same ones in place for his last show in Bramlage.

"We're gonna raise a little hell and have a lot of fun," Brooks told the audience.

Both rules were followed to a tee.

Early in the show, Brooks called out his wife,

Sandy, to introduce her to the audience.

The band got a break after it performed "Shameless" while Brooks performed "Unanswered Prayers" by himself on the stage.

The night was full of crowd-pleasers, from "Rodeo" and "American Honky-Tonk Bar Association" to "Callin' Baton Rouge."

Brooks made a point to include favorites from his first five albums, as well as recent hits from "Fresh Horses."

Two of those early favorites, "The Thunder Rolls" and "Friends in Low Places," were performed with their extra verses.

The crowd was singing loud enough to drown out the band on "Friends in Low Places," but became even louder as Brooks told it that it was being recorded for a live album to be released after the current tour.

"The Dance" followed "Friends in Low Places" to close out the show, but the crowd was not finished yet.

Cowboy boots stomping the seats at Bramlage brought the band back out for one more song — "Ain't Going Down (Until the Sun Comes Up)."

The crowd still was not satisfied.

Brooks, alone with his acoustic guitar, came back out to center stage.

Brooks sang Bob Seger's "Night Moves" and Don McLean's "American Pie" along with most of the audience.

The encore songs were a great way to end an evening full of rousing country music.

REVIEW

'School' offers message-filled ditties, memories

Bill Bontempo
staff writer

Finally, members of the alternative rock scene have produced music with a message.

The music is fun and inspired, and anyone who watched Saturday morning cartoons as a child will appreciate the production of the compact disc "School House Rock! Rocks."

With performances of "I'm Just a Bill" by Deluxx Folk Implosion, "Conjunction Junction" by Better Than Ezra and "The Shot Heard 'Round the World" by Ween, the CD mixes memories of childhood and adolescence.

"School House Rock! Rocks" features new versions of the educational ditties originally written by Bob Dorough, George Newell and Lynn Ahrens, and made famous on ABC Saturday morning children's programming.

On most tracks, the artists stay true to the form of the original songs adding only slight variations in rhythm and style.

Ween almost makes "The Shot Heard 'Round the World" sound like the original.

Blind Melon's version of "Three Is A Magic Number" stays true to the original rhythm, and the addition of Shannon Hoon's high and whiny vocals make it come to life.

The producers also chose the perfect artist in Biz Markie for "Energy Blues," as his rough, heavy voice exaggerates the plight of energy for the listener.

Buffalo Tom speeds up "Lolly, Lolly, Lolly, Get Your Adverbs Here" so much the words are hard to understand, but the song is still fun and nostalgic.

With a lisp in his voice and a tongue-in-cheek delivery, Daniel Johnston sings "Unpack Your Adjectives" as if the song were written for him.

Other performers on the CD include the Lemonheads, Skee-Lo, Moby, Pavement and Chavez, creating a diverse collection of sounds.

The CD also includes a colorful book, which features the lyrics for each song as well as interesting cartoon depictions of the various artists.

The cartoons are consistent with the theme of each song such as the cartoon of Man Or Astro-Man? pictured in space suits in front "Interplanet Janet" on a rocket.

Thumbing through the book while listening to the songs brings back lazy mornings in front of the television waiting for the next Road Runner adventure.

"School House Rock" has gathered somewhat of a cult following over the years and many of the bands who perform their versions of the songs probably learned about history, math and government from the original songs.

This CD may serve as a valuable educational tool for today's teachers as the medium of popular music pervades an ever-younger audience.

The only classic "School House Rock" song not included on the CD is "The Constitution," so listeners who wish to educate themselves on that topic will be forced to visit their local libraries.

A portion of the proceeds generated by the sale of the CD will go to Children's Defense Fund, a children's advocacy group.

Jeff Barrett, a local musician, plays "Can You Feel the Love Tonight," a song from the movie "The Lion King," Friday afternoon in the gym at Woodrow Wilson Elementary School. Barrett performed songs and talked to the students about the importance of music.

KSU grad performs for grade-schoolers

Laurel Howell
staff writer

Jeff Barrett, rather than Garth Brooks, may have been the hottest act in town for some students at Woodrow Wilson Elementary School this weekend.

Barrett, a local musician, performed for Woodrow Wilson students Friday afternoon at the request of music teacher Carlita Pederson.

Pederson said she asked Barrett to do a show for her students after watching him perform at Rowdy Trout's in Aggieville several months ago.

"She mentioned they play my CD here at the school, which freaked me out," Barrett said.

Barrett performed several popular songs including "Can You Feel the Love Tonight" by Elton John and "Breakfast at Tiffany's" by Deep Blue Something, as well as his own songs, "Places" and "Familiar Country Road."

The students surprised Barrett when they began singing along with him during "Places."

"I taught them the words, so they can sing along and surprise him," Pederson said.

Between songs, Barrett answered questions and talked about the importance of music education.

He answered questions about how he gets ideas for his songs, if he writes about ex-girlfriends and what to do if a student wants to get into performing.

In addition to songs sung by Barrett, two fifth-graders, Leighanna Martin and Simone Beverly, sang "There's In Each of Us," an original song written by Martin. John David Parsons also performed "Musical Instruments" by Michael W. Smith on the piano.

Barrett said he was impressed by the students' performances and said he did not expect them to be so good.

"Wow, I wish I had been that good at your age," Barrett said.

At the end of the show, Barrett presented each of the student performers with a copy of his compact disc, "Familiar Country Road."

Barrett began performing in bars and clubs while attending K-State. He graduated in 1994 with a bachelor of science degree in public relations.

Since graduating, he has released his first album, "Familiar Country Road," in 1995 and has been performing at clubs, universities and colleges throughout the country.

Barrett laughs after hearing a question from a student at Woodrow Wilson Elementary School during Friday's performance.

Brooks' popularity has skyrocketed, and along with his success country music got a rebirth tackling broader issues and becoming more political.

"I think country music has always been political," he said. "But now people are asking more questions and paying more attention."

Brooks' newest single, "The Change," takes on this approach by remembering those who died in the Oklahoma City bombing in April 1995, but the song also addresses how this world has changed.

Brooks said his tour was in Miami on April 19, and he and his wife held hands at 10:02 a.m. eastern time, which meant it was 9:02 a.m. in Oklahoma, and said a prayer.

"We didn't get the honor to be in Oklahoma on that day," he said. "But we sent a message — they will not be forgotten."

Brooks was presented with a plaque by Charlie Thomas, director of Bramlage, and Jim Muller, associate director of Bramlage, for record-setting concerts and record-setting attendance by an artist at K-State.

Sean and Meredith Snyder, head football coach Bill Snyder's son and daughter, presented Brooks with a K-

State football jersey before the concert Friday.

"It even has number 12 on it from my days at Oklahoma State University," Brooks said.

Randy Taylor, assistant professor in biological and agricultural engineering, has a Brooks connection.

"A friend of mine who is here at K-State wrote a song for me called 'Much Too Young to Feel This Damn Old,'" Brooks said.

From Concordia to Topeka to Wichita and Augusta, there are eight members from Brooks' band and crew from Kansas. "If these people are representatives from around here, you all are represented real well," Brooks said.

MARTIN

Student Union Bookstore debated whether to dump the odd-smelling liquid sitting in his cappuccino mug.

They describe Martin as a busy person who loves cappuccino.

"Every day he would go get cappuccino, and there would always be about this much left," Justin Carlson, junior in humanities, said as he pointed about halfway down the mug.

Martin's activities include being a long-time computer salesman at the bookstore, being active in the National Guard, organizing his wedding, studying Russian culture and beginning a computer business with five friends.

"He had some really good ideas for business," Carlson said. Plans for the business include focusing on business systems and computers in the Manhattan area.

Co-worker Pat Beedles, sophomore in architectural engineering, described Martin as an ambitious guy.

"He'll give anything a shot," he said. Martin's personality comes to life with a quick glance of his cappuccino mug, which his co-workers said has a personality of its own.

The mug — which is an old K-State Willie mug — is plastered with a bicycle reflector, Kansas map sticker, a large blue sticker, a yellow sticker and a simple purple label that says "Garrett."

The mug is sitting in the back computer retail section of the bookstore, waiting for him to return.

junior in architecture, was walking out of a nearby house and saw the post-collision impact.

"I was walking to my car, and I just heard this loud thud," Hunter said. "Then I looked over and saw this kid's body flying in mid-air."

"I stood there and saw the body hit the ground. Then I waited a few seconds to see if it made an effort to get up. It didn't, so I went back into the house and had someone call for an ambulance, and then I went back to the scene."

Hunter said Dill was unconscious when he arrived at the scene.

"When I got there he wasn't moving at all," Hunter said. "He was knocked out, but I could see he was breathing, and I felt a little twitch in his hand."

The car left the area, but the only witness, Hunter, was unable to get a description of the car to give officials.

"There was a street light shining down on the car, and it was so bright that I couldn't even tell for sure what color it was. I couldn't tell if there were any passengers in the car, and the car just drove off doing 30 or 35. I saw no sign of brake lights, and, if anything, it may have sped up as it left."

Lopez, senior in education, turned himself in to the RCPD about an hour later at 2:30 a.m., identifying himself as the driver of the vehicle that struck Dill.

Lopez was arrested for DUI, leaving the scene of an injury accident and aggravated battery. He later posted a $5,000 bond and was released from custody.

Lopez declined an interview for this article. Dill was still listed in critical condition in St. Francis' SICU Sunday afternoon.

"Alex is still critically ill," his mother, Sandy Dill, said. "He hit a low this morning when we found out he had infection in his lungs. The doctors don't think it's a major thing and is something that can be expected for what he's been through."

"He's in a coma, but he still has good reflexes and movement. He was breathing on his own when they first brought him in."

Dill's mother said holes have also been drilled into Dill's skull to relieve pressure and possible swelling of the brain, but with the exception of infections in his lungs his condition has not changed from the time of the accident.

Dill's roommate Jeff Rath, junior in engineering, said Dill's condition has not really set in for him or his friends.

"We're pretty concerned for our friend," Rath said. "There are signs of hope and now everybody is just waiting. It will probably take two or three days for us to really get a grasp on the situation."

Rath described his roommate as anybody's friend.

"He's a good friendly person who anybody can talk to. He loves outdoor recreation, and working with landscape design is what he likes to do. He's worked on several golf courses and we're all optimistic that he'll be fine," Rath said.

RCPD reported Lopez's car sustained more than $500 worth of damage in the accident and Lopez failed the intoxication test given to him when he turned himself in.

in different offices," she said. "With the change, we will be able to get people together and work more closely with the staff members."

Space for the move became available when payroll moved out of Anderson Hall last fall and into Edwards

Hall. "We were on a priority list to get more space," Foster said.

The registrar's office will be sharing space upstairs in Anderson with the admissions office.

Rachel Strawn, senior in education, said she is looking forward to the change.

"It will be nice to have the two offices so close," she said. "Now we don't have to run all over campus to take care of things, especially with financial aid right across the street."

DeVault said the physical movement shouldn't affect students too much.

"Once we go electronic, students will be able to get the information they need on their own."

No date has been set for SIAS to become available to students.

Codes identify check writers

■ Union uses traits to assist in tracking bad check writers

Rhonda Lee
staff reporter

Your student ID number is not the only thing written on your checks at the K-State Student Union.

Union employees also write down your race and gender every time you write a check.

The additional information is used for proof of positive identification in case the check is bad.

It gives police more information when making an arrest.

Many students, faculty and staff do not know that their race and gender are recorded in codes on each check written at the Union, except for Subway.

The codes for race are the No. 1 for white, two for black, three is Hispanic and four for Asian and other. For gender, one is male, and two is female.

Sira Sidiki, senior in finance, said she found there to be inaccuracies in the policy.

When she first noticed the codes being written on her checks, she said she noticed she was being classified as what she now knows was a black female.

The second time she was noted as white, and by the third time she requested that she be classified as "other."

Sidiki said she felt she was the subject of prejudice because of the policy.

Because she is of mixed ethnicity, Sidiki said she felt she was classified without sufficient proof.

"If all that is needed is a driver's license, that should be enough," Sidiki said.

Bill Kennedy, Riley County Attorney, wrote the identification codes and suggested they be used by all Riley County merchants.

Jack Thoman, assistant director of Student Union business affairs, said because of past false arrests, the county attorney suggested race and gender of check writers be recorded by merchants for identification purposes to prevent mistakes in the event of an arrest.

It was a business decision in an attempt to minimize losses, he said.

"We had suggestions strongly urging us from the county attorney. They said, 'If you don't attempt to do a better job, we won't help you collect on those checks.' The other item that they've asked for that we have shied away from some is the date of birth, but the Union doesn't use the driver's license," Thoman said.

Because the Union handles such a large amount of checks, taking infor-

Gender, race recorded on checks

In an effort to positively identify people arrested for writing bad checks, K-State Student Union employees are recording customers' gender and race on all checks written in the Union, except for Subway®.

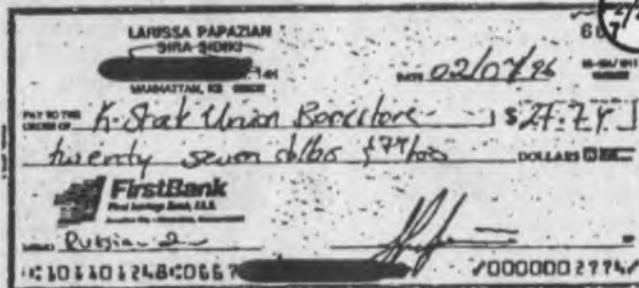

The K-State Union codes:

Gender — 1 for male, 2 for female

Race — 1 white, 2 black, 3 Hispanic, 4 Asian, *5 Other

A Union employee identified this person as female (2) and 'other' for race (5). The same person was also identified as female (2) and black (2).

* Identification codes suggested for use by Bill Kennedy, Riley County Attorney, categorize No. 4 as Asian/other. The K-State Union designates No. 4 as Asian and No. 5 as other.

Australian gunman kills 34 in rampage

Associated Press

PORT ARTHUR, Australia — The deadliest massacre in Australia's modern history came to a fiery end today after police captured a gunman who slaughtered at least 34 people, then bolted in flames from an inn he set ablaze.

The man had barricaded himself inside the inn with three hostages, and two bodies were found in the burned rubble on the island of Tasmania. Police said the third hostage also likely perished, which would raise the death toll to 35.

Police sources and the Australian Broadcasting Corp. radio identified the gunman as Martin Bryant, a former resident of Hobart. Police said the 28-year-old had a history of psychological problems.

Armed with a semiautomatic rifle, the man methodically gunned down tourists Sunday at the Port Arthur historical site before retreating to the nearby bed and breakfast, which was owned by friends of his late father's.

After a 12-hour standoff, the gunman set fire to the inn and was driven out by the flames. He threw his rifle aside.

"His clothing was on fire, and he started taking his clothing off," police Superintendent Bob Fielding said.

Witnesses said the gunman muttered racially tinged remarks before walking toward the Broad Arrow Cafe, where he pulled a high-powered rifle from a tennis bag and began shooting.

Today the bodies of 20 victims remained in the cafe, some sitting in front of half-eaten lunches. Police did not move the bodies for fear of disturbing evidence.

► DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Federal aid applications are on schedule

Nikki Prentice
staff reporter

The Department of Education is back on track in processing student financial aid applications for the 1996-97 school year after a backup of 900,000 applications due to the government shutdown earlier this year and new data technologies.

As reported in March, the department was almost 1 million applications behind schedule. The department indicated at the end of last week that it is completely caught up on processing applications and on regular processing schedule.

As a result, about 14 days after submitting a federal financial aid application to the federal government, the applicant should receive a response letter indicating loan rewards.

While the Department of Education is caught up in application processing, all files haven't arrived at the designated schools, said Larry Moeder, K-State's director of student financial assistance.

K-State has about 11,000 applications, which is 1,000 applications off the normal application amount for this time of year.

Most institutions around the country are indicating to be in the upper 80-percent range of normal application volume.

"As we look at our past years and the number of applications that we normally have in-house at this time, we are at 87 percent of normal in-house federal applications," Moeder said.

Summer financial aid applications have not been affected by the processing delay.

"Summer financial aid applications are based on current year's financial aid for this spring and fall semesters," Moeder said.

"That eligibility also carries forward to the summer."

The application deadline for summer financial aid was April 15, but students can still apply.

Students should definitely still continue to apply if they are interested in summer or fall semesters, Moeder said.

Loans still available for summer session include Federal Stafford and Federal Direct Loans. The school is out of funds in the Perkins Loan program for this summer.

Students applying for summer financial aid should do so no later than July 15, Moeder said. This will allow students to have money available during some point in the summer session.

For fall 1996, students can still be considered for Federal Stafford or Federal Direct Loans.

The Stafford Loan is designed for upper-level students where the Federal Direct Loans are given to freshmen and sophomore students. Students receive the same amount of money regardless of educational status.

Henry Kissinger, former U.S. Secretary of State, speaks on the need for a change in U.S. policy, stating that the current policy is too similar to the domestic policy. Kissinger spoke during the 106th Landon Lecture in Bramlage Colliseum.

Kissinger says U.S. must return to fundamental foreign policy

Chris Oakley
staff writer

Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger told the audience at the 106th Landon Lecture Monday that the United States needs to develop a foreign policy with specific goals and work toward attaining them.

Kissinger, who is chairman of Kissinger Associates Inc., an international consulting firm, spoke about the international situation as he views it.

He said there are adjustments in foreign policy he thought were necessary for the United States in the new political environment in the world.

Kissinger said policy makers must return to fundamentals in deciding foreign policy.

He said the United States must also consider each country's history when dealing with it.

"My point is the U.S., given the situation I have described, must learn a non-partisan approach to foreign policy," he said.

Kissinger said the United States must also be able to separate a country's foreign policy from its domestic affairs when dealing with it.

"The Chinese do not consider it self-evident that we should tell them how to run their country," he said.

"We are in the position as a nation that we have fewer quar-

Speaker corrects movie version of Nixon's life

Henry Kissinger's Landon Lecture was a cover-up for a conspiracy involving wealthy Texans and former Nixon administration employees.

Rather, that is what Oliver Stone might have you think.

One of the topics Kissinger did not discuss in his lecture was the factual errors in Oliver Stone's 1995 movie, "Nixon."

In the press conference that followed, however, Kissinger corrected some of the artistic liberties

Stone has been known to take.

"I saw the movie," Kissinger said. "In fact, I even wrote a review of the movie."

"Here is a movie that is fantastically inaccurate in every significant respect," he said.

Kissinger said even minor items in the film are wrong.

"Nobody that knew Nixon has ever heard him call his wife 'Buddy,'" he said. "It doesn't prove anything."

► ATTORNEY ARGUES FOR BROADCAST OF OKLAHOMA CITY TRIAL TAPES

DENVER (AP) — A media attorney on Monday disputed defense claims that broadcast of audio tapes in the Oklahoma City bombing case would harm defendants, arguing the taped word is no different from the printed word.

Thomas B. Kelley, representing the Colorado/Oklahoma Media Trial Group, said the attorneys were aware before hearings began in the bombing case that federal courts made tapes of hearings available to the public. He said that practice should not be changed now.

Reid Neureiter, an attorney for bombing suspect Terry Nichols, earlier this month asked a federal judge to bar distribution of the tapes. He said the news media only picked out "prejudicial and inflammatory" statements from an April 9 hearing for Nichols and codefendant Timothy McVeigh.

Nichols and McVeigh face federal murder and conspiracy charges in the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City. A total of 168 people were killed, and more than 500 others were injured.

Kelley said the federal court already makes tapes for its own record, and attorneys and witnesses would continue to use "inflammatory" and "strident" speech during the hearings, with or without press coverage.

"The presence of the press, either as repeaters of words or as transmitters of voices, is not likely to have any significant impact on the conduct of the participants," Kelley said.

Neureiter also asked U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch to block audio feeds from the courtroom to the courthouse press room, saying it could hurt Nichols' right to a fair trial.

Kelley said defense arguments that the audio feed to the press room would be broadcast to the public were untrue. He said the audio feed would only be used internally. He said the audio feed is necessary to reduce the number of persons in the courtroom and the time for distributing tapes.

► DANCING OFFICER TO BE FIRED ONCE REPLACEMENT IS FOUND

TOPEKA (AP) — A senior Kansas Air National Guard officer accused of dancing on a table in a provocative manner at the Guard's recent annual conference will be terminated as soon as a replacement is found, Adjutant General, Maj. Gen. James Rueger announced Monday.

The unidentified officer, with the rank of major, lieutenant colonel or colonel, was found to have danced on the table in full military dress uniform at the end of the dance, Rueger said in a statement.

An investigation failed to confirm allegations that the officer performed a sexual act and exposed himself during the incident, the statement said. The dance was at the April 12-13 conference in Topeka.

"It was substantiated that the officer's wife and three other Air National Guard couples were present at the table when the senior officer, fully clothed in a military dress uniform, danced in a provocative manner on the table at approximately 11:45 p.m., just before the conclusion of the dance. This is not condoned by the National Guard," an earlier statement said.

Monday's announcement said the officer's promotion package is being rescinded and he will be terminated from his Guard position when a replacement is found within the next six months.

► CLINTON TARGETS DRUG USE

MIAMI (AP) — Criticized as weak in the war on drugs, President Clinton announced a drive Monday to curb a sharp rise in marijuana use among young people and to stop the spread of the cheap and dangerous drug methamphetamine.

The administration said Clinton's election-year initiative was the opening shot in a 10-year effort aimed at returning America to a 1960s, pre-Vietnam level of drug use.

"Make no mistake about it, this has got to be a bipartisan, American, non-political effort," said Clinton, even as Republicans scoffed at his drug-fighting record.

"Since Bill Clinton was elected, the number of illegal aliens is up, the number of drug addicts is up," House Speaker Newt Gingrich said in a Las Vegas speech. In Washington, Republicans said drug use skyrocketed after Clinton cut back the White House drug policy office and downgraded the tough-on-crime approach of presidents Bush and Reagan.

► MONKEYS EAT LESS, LIVE LONGER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reducing calories by 30 percent appears to slow the rate of aging in monkeys, providing new evidence that primates, such as humans, could live longer by eating less.

A National Institutes of Health study using about 200 monkeys has shown that a well-balanced diet that includes a sharp reduction in calories caused the animals to have a lower body temperature, a slower metabolism and fewer changes in biochemical markers for aging.

"This shows that what has been demonstrated in mice also can apply in primates," said Dr. George Roth, a scientist at the gerontology research center of the National Institute on Aging.

"We have known for 70 years that if you feed laboratory mice less food, they age slower, they live longer and they get diseases less frequently," he said. "We find that monkeys respond in the same way as rodents and that the same biological changes may be in play here."

Speaker discusses environmental justice

■ Organization fights harmful dumps, landfills that are targeted to be built in poor neighborhoods

AbdullNaser T. Abdullah
staff reporter

The environment is an important issue that has gained more and more attention around the world. In America, environmental organizations are uniting to fight environmental injustice, especially in rural, low-income communities.

"We would not be talking about environmental justice if there was not environmental injustice," said Richard Moore, chairman of the National Environmental Justice Council for the EPA.

"I'm here as a representative for the Southwest Network for Environmental and Economic Justice," he said.

The Network is made up of 70 organizations that deal with economic and environmental justice issues.

Moore has been a community activist for 30 years. He has dealt with health care, child care, immigration and many other issues, he said.

"We want our children to be brought up in a healthy, clean environment," Moore said.

"We house in my neighborhood the city's only sewage system," he said. Moore is from Albuquerque. The problems associated with being near the sewage system are plenty, he said.

Smell, contamination and maintenance are some problems, he said.

"For the last 25 years, the state of New Mexico has been aware that we were drinking contaminated water," he said.

Solutions were slow in appearing, he said. The water in Moore's community contains high levels of nitrates and nitroglycerin, he said.

Tap water was used to make a formula bottle for a baby. One hour after the child drank the formula, he turned blue, Moore said.

Oxygen was being sucked out of the baby because of the contaminated water, he said.

"We are struggling over the question of having the right to know," Moore said.

"We want to know what gases or harmful chemicals we have been exposed to," he said.

These problems always come up in poor communities, he said.

"A survey done showed that eight of 10 dumps, landfills, sewage systems, etc. were being targeted in poor neighborhoods in Houston, Texas," he said.

People who are exposed to pesticides and related sicknesses are mainly the hard-working farmers, he said.

A survey done by the University of California at Davis showed that women in the electronics industry who had low-level jobs were exposed to chemicals.

"The results were unfortunate documentation that proved that women in the electronics industry have faced problems," he said.

Women in the electronics industry have had miscarriages, childbirth problems and many other illnesses, Moore said.

"We can't continue to let this happen," Moore said.

The hard-working people must be cared for and not exploited, he said.

Moore said that he is not anti-industry but wanted a clean environment.

Moore talked about the closure of a medical incinerator in New Mexico.

"A medical incinerator was built 200 yards from an elementary school," he said.

Anything that came from a medical institution was burned there — from needles to body parts, he said.

The children at the school developed skin rashes and all sorts of problems, Moore said.

After a long struggle, the state of New Mexico realized that and closed down the incinerator, he said.

"We don't have any choice, but we have responsibility," he said.

People must realize what is happening to their environment and do something about it, he said.

"It's about not in anybody's backyard," Moore said.

Getting rid of contamination in a community and placing it in another one is not the goal here, he said.

"We presented a transition document to the Clinton administration," he said.

The document includes things to be done to correct the environmental injustice occurring in small, rural communities, Moore said.

"We are proud of the Clinton administration for adopting some of the issues presented in the document," Moore said.

Union should require 2 IDs for checks

QUICKread

The K-State Student Union should start requiring driver's licenses for identification of check writers, not relying on race and gender, as is now the practice.

The K-State Student Union is trying to locate the authors of the many bad checks it receives, but it is not going about it the smart way.

The Union is writing down codes that label check writers by gender and by race. Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy advised them these were just two items that would help police prosecute bad check writers. The Union identifies race as white, black, Hispanic, Asian and other.

The obvious flaw to identifying people by race is the lack of specificity these codes provide. Many people do not look their race — their skin color does not readily identify them.

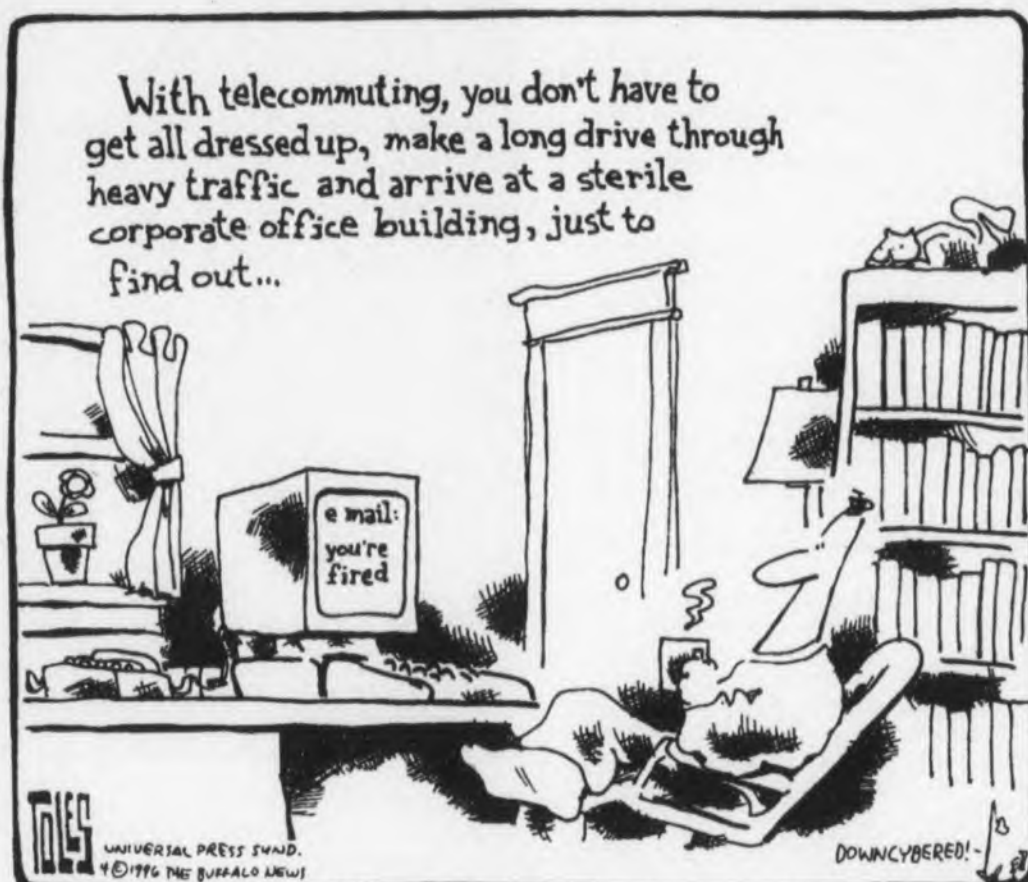

What exactly do police have to go on when someone is identified as "Asian or other," anyway? How many men match the description of "white male?"

The Union's troubles would be solved by requiring two forms of identification. A student ID would provide a social security number, and a driver's license would include name, address, birth date — not to mention far more specific identifying factors, such as height, hair and eye color. More importantly, vendors could check both photo IDs to ensure authors are who they say they are.

It might be more time-consuming to write all this information down, but if the Union is serious about prosecuting or stopping bad check writers, it is going to take more effort than a guess at gender and race.

Coffee, nature, revelations

During the course of the past few weeks, I've come to the conclusion that people have replaced faith in their bodies with faith in electric lights, alarm clocks and caffeine.

Myview

KEELY Schields

I'll explain. I have pretty strong faith in my right hand, especially when it comes to writing. Virtually every bit of writing I do begins with pencil and notebook, because I enjoy the self-assured sliding of my hand from left to right across a piece of paper.

This particular piece of writing originated in some scribbles late at night next to the big "Little Apple" water tower.

The only light to speak of lay in the twinkling of Manhattan below, the dull aqua glow of the digits on my car's clock and at one point, the slow panning of a police car's headlights across the interior of my car.

It was reassuring to know the city's finest were on the lookout for youthful fornicators and fornicatrices, and I hope I wasn't too big a disappointment to them, because I was just there drinking coffee and writing — in the dark, without even looking at the page.

While I wrote, I gazed out at the city lights below, because there was really no use in watching my right hand.

I couldn't see what it was doing, but I felt it starting and stopping in utter uncertainty, guessing as to the location of the "T" it needed to cross or the new line it needed to begin.

Once again, writing boiled down to the third-grade struggle of forming letters and connecting as fluidly as possible into words. I quickly became frustrated and concluded that writing in the dark when there is plenty of light is silly.

Then again, maybe the truly silly thing is being awake while it's so dark out.

Gazing out at the lights of Manhattan, I couldn't help comparing them to the sunrise I had watched a few days earlier. (Of course, I had to set my alarm clock to get up and see it.)

There was light enough to see by even when the orb of the sun hadn't quite emerged, but when it peeked over the hill I was watching, everything suddenly became vivid — almost eerily so. It seemed such a natural time of the day to be awake and outside.

In contrast, the cluster of street lights, lights in buildings and tail-lights beneath me barely penetrated the darkness of nighttime. In spite of all the manipulated power it takes to light a city, all those little lights, as Shakespeare might have put it, "are nothing like the sun."

Be that as it might, our society seems to prefer these pale substitutes. At least, we put a great deal of effort into staying up late and sleeping in late. It's as if the majority of us share a collective perversion, which makes us run from our natural source of light.

Taking another sip of coffee, I realized that here in my left hand, I held yet another tool for sun escape. Like college students and tired people everywhere, I often drink coffee, because it keeps me up at night.

Ultimately, though, even caffeine cannot overpower my natural urge to nod off when it's dark, and I fall asleep. Then, in the morning, I have to rely on my alarm clock to get me back up, because I don't trust my confused body to rise when the sunlight returns. And I follow my alarm with nothing other than more coffee.

Why? Maybe people themselves are the silliest of all.

Nostalgia for the Nixon years

On Monday, Henry Kissinger delivered the 106th Landon Lecture on public issues in Bramlage Coliseum.

I was approached by a friend before the lecture who confided in me he talked to some other students who didn't even know there was a lecture yesterday. One even had the audacity to inquire who this Henry Kissinger is, and why he would speak at K-State. (Shudder.)

Well, I'm not a Republican, and I wasn't even alive when Richard Nixon was in office, but I do read the occasional news magazine and/or newspaper. I'm also a sympathetic listener when a man who is a towering figure of 20th-century foreign policy takes his time to address my University. Actually, Kissinger is an icon.

Staring at him during the lecture, I saw past the greying hair and the aging face to see the mythical secretary of state, frozen in popular culture as if a subject of a Warhol silkscreen. There Kissinger stood, wearing thick-framed glasses, speaking in his legendary vernacular to a transfixed audience.

And did he speak. This Landon Lecture was, I dare say, the most succinct, relevant, interesting and organized lecture I've heard (and I've been to most of them during the past three years). It was no Perotese ramble or Janet Reno re-election stump speech. It was a real lecture delivered with wit, intelligence and thoughtful consideration.

Kissinger lectured on international foreign policy — his bread and butter and the reason he is such a respected individual.

In keeping with the political spirit, Kissinger took a few punches at the Clinton administration. He criticized Clinton's view of the United States as international peace-keeper.

"We cannot go all over the world slaying dragons," he said amusingly. Kissinger said the United States must choose its conflicts wisely, and those decisions are left to the president and the secretary of state.

It is easy to criticize sitting administrations, especially when you are not a part of them, but Kissinger made some valid points.

He narrowed the focus of the lecture, at least for the most part, to three countries he felt would emerge as significant players in foreign policy in the coming decades: Russia, China and India.

His most penetrating argument was in order for the United States to conduct foreign policy, it should have a deep understanding of each country's history. Countries like Russia and China have histories and traditions that span millennia, unlike the relatively newborn United States.

Kissinger seemed to be asking how dare the United States demand anything of a country much older than itself. America's tendency to consider itself as the preeminent world-power might be its ironic road to irrelevance.

Kissinger criticized the American press and the Clinton administration for obsessing over Russian domestic policy, such as the upcoming Russian elections. He said for American Russian policy to be objectively effective, it must address the issue of rebuilding Russian society.

Of course, he's right. However, it is much easier to interest the American public in Russian issues if we have a name and face to represent the problem: Boris Yeltsin. Kissinger said Yeltsin only differs slightly from his predecessor Mikhail Gorbachev, another media darling.

It's not Russia in which we identify Kissinger, rather his influential courting of China. Although we even now experience trade problems with China, the fact we are not at war is probably owed to the Nixon administration and Kissinger.

Reflecting on Nixon's historic visit to China in the 1970s, Kissinger said although there exists a vast ideological gulf between the two countries, it is not possible to imagine a stable Asia and a peaceful world without some effort to deal with China.

As President Jon Wefald eloquently pointed out in the introduction, Kissinger's interests and subsequent lecture strangely parallel Alf Landon's first lecture in 1966 in which he said roughly the same thing concerning Chinese foreign policy. It is as if the Landon series has come full-circle.

There were few surprises in the lecture. Kissinger didn't support sending U.S. troops to Bosnia or Somalia. He said he doesn't think troops should be used for humanitarian purposes, which drew praise from the audience.

Kissinger's practicality feels so new and fresh in this current age of political sound-bytes and posturing. Here this anomaly, this well-preserved, control-group visionary from the 1970s is making sense to me.

Kissinger represents an old school in foreign policy. He understands China is violating human rights, but he doesn't understand how that should affect our trade policy.

He's not the bleeding heart who buckles to media pressure to offer humanitarian aid to blighted countries via the U.S. military. He's not too busy feeling guilty over an issue he can't control to do something about it.

If there was an underlying nudge, it was voting for Dole will improve our foreign policy situation. I'm not so sure about that, but I'm feeling quite nostalgic this week for the no-nonsense, hard-lined politics of the Nixon administration.

COLUMNIST NOT CONCERNED ABOUT ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

Editor,

In his April 22 opinion column, Jason Hamilton describes himself as "an environmentalist, albeit not a very good one." There was a time when that title was used to describe people who were deeply concerned about the soil, water, air and biota of the planet they lived on, people who were willing to sacrifice time, money and convenience in an attempt to improve or restore the quality of those resources.

In recent years, however, individuals and interest groups in the logging, mining and agricultural industries have been using the term environmentalist to describe themselves in an attempt to ward off criticism of their often-times destructive activities. Hamilton, with an insulting lack of sincerity, used the same tactic to try to give his opinion column about "environmental idiots" some credibility.

I've read innumerable books and journals (including the EarthFirst! journal) dealing with environmental issues. I've known or met people who have chained themselves to trees and stood in front of bulldozers. I've had discussions about the problems and possible solutions to many of our environmental problems with respected members of academia, as well as inconspicuous but concerned members of society. My college education has been in the areas of natural resource management and wildlife conservation.

These experiences and interactions lead me to conclude Hamilton knows little to nothing about environmentalism, environmentalists (idiot or otherwise), or EarthFirst!. Yet he attempts (and fails) to enlighten the students of this campus on various aspects of these movements and philosophies.

I would appreciate an intelligent criticism of any aspect of environmentalism that incorporates well-educated thought and the opinions of people who are respected for their knowledge on the subject. Hamilton's column contained none of this. (The George Carlin quote does not constitute an opinion of someone who is respected for having knowledge on environmental issues.) It appeared to be merely his observations of some of his acquaintances, which he uses to characterize groups of people that perhaps exist only in his mind.

I honestly have never met anyone who believes humans should abandon all technology, or anyone who thinks that life would be better without penicillin. I'm inclined to think Hamilton hasn't met these people either, but he calls them "Technophobes" and attempts to give us detailed descriptions of their philosophies.

I have also never met anyone who thinks the planet is going to die or will be destroyed by humans. I have met numerous people who are deeply concerned about the future of our planet and what constitutes quality in the world they live in. Nothing in Hamilton's column leads me to believe he is remotely concerned or educated about these issues, or that he deserves the privilege of calling himself an environmentalist.

mation like date of birth, height, weight or other information that can be found on a driver's license could be time consuming.

"With the volume we handle, we felt it improved at least if we did the race and gender piece of it," Thoman said.

He said he admitted sometimes it is hard to use good judgment on someone's actual ethnicity, and this method of identification was not meant to offend Union customers.

"It was not meant to be discriminatory. It was meant to be protective, so we are not sending someone after the wrong person," he said.

This method of identification on checks is legal.

"We inquired about this with the University attorney about this whole issue. This is not the same as an employment circumstance. As long as we're consistent and taking it down from every person walking through the line, then you're not just singling out anyone," he said.

Two or three years ago, sheriff and police organizations throughout the state said they refused to process or serve warrants because of civil liability without descriptions on the warrant, Kennedy said.

"The name of the person to be arrested is simply not enough for them to take on themselves the liability of arresting somebody. Because there are plenty of 'Bill Kennedys' and 'John Does' in the world, and there have been a number of people filing lawsuits when they've been the wrong person arrested," Kennedy said.

Although most local merchants require a driver's license or other form of picture identification, the information typically recorded from those IDs is not useful when making an arrest, Kennedy said.

"The arresting officer gets a piece of paper that says, 'go out, get this person, and bring him to me, the judge, that I may demand of him that he face the charges.' The law-enforcement officer then wants to know that he's got the right person," he said.

"So they want descriptors on the check. The person saying 'I looked at the check, I looked at the person and I looked at their photo ID, and they matched,' doesn't help the guy picking them up."

Kennedy said he was not certain if it was common practice for the arresting officer to ask for ID of the suspect before the arrest is made.

"I think we are getting a higher return on warrants, but I also know that we are serving them faster. But I don't know if the ID factor is helping. I can't say mathematically it's proven to be helpful. I do know the contrary without the descriptors," Kennedy said.

In cases of inaccuracies or discrepancies in race or gender, Kennedy was not clear what the arresting officer would do. He said writing race and gender on checks works as a reasonable identifier.

Although this is a suggested form of prevention of false arrests, Kennedy said it is not mandatory that merchants comply.

"I have never told anybody they had to use the system, but I have told the people that they had to have three identifiers," Kennedy said.

Identifiers could include date of birth, height or weight.

Rocky Master, assistant manager of Wal-Mart, said there is no policy of writing race and gender on checks at Wal-Mart.

He said the letters sent out by the Riley County Attorney's office might have reached his store, but there are no plans to change the policy to be in accordance with the Riley County Attorney's Office.

Only first-time check writers whose checks are run through their check-reader, or checks that come up unrecognized, are asked for identification.

"Unless we get notified from our home office that the check procedure that we process has been changed, we normally don't change it. But never would we ever put any kind of coding on checks to say who or what that person is — regardless of race or gender," Master said.

rels with nations than they have with each other."

He said concerns about a new world order were not correct.

"A world order arises only if most of the major countries are satisfied enough with the current conditions, so they will not try to upset them with force," he said.

"It does not now exist, because almost every country finds itself in a world where little in history has prepared it."

Kissinger said the United States is fairly new to foreign policy. He said prior to World War II, domestic and foreign policy were each handled by using the country's resources to deal with them.

"The U.S. was brought up in an environment where it was protected by two great oceans — until 1945 it didn't have to conduct any foreign policy," he said.

Kissinger said he felt the United States should determine which issues and situations were most important to its foreign policy and concern itself with them, instead of intervening in situations where it has little at stake.

"We can only do it where it affects our security or the security of indispensable allies. We cannot go around the world slaying dragons," he said.

"We do not have to be in the front line of every confrontation."

Kissinger said he disagrees with using troops in troubled spots, instead of sending aid.

"I do not think the U.S. Army has been created to distribute food in trouble spots," he said.

Kissinger said the United States must choose its foreign policy issues carefully.

"We need a much more general and sophisticated approach," he said.

"Our big challenge is first to learn what is a little problem. The second is to reduce the big problems to little problems."

Kissinger said he felt foreign policy has been misunderstood by both citizens and policy makers.

"We have divided our approach with those who thought foreign policy was a sub-division of psychology and those who thought it was a subdivision of theology," he said.

Kissinger said some of the lesser-developed countries, such as Indonesia, India and China, will emerge as industrial powers, and an energy crisis may develop.

He said China is not interested in dealing atomic weapons to neighboring countries.

"The Chinese will not spread weapons because they would be used by neighboring countries against them before they would be used against the U.S.," he said.

show me with a cigar," Kissinger said.

"Now, these are minor things."

However, there are fundamental problems in the film, mainly as a result of Stone's liberal artistic license with conspiracy theories.

In "JFK," Stone suggested President Kennedy's assassination was a plot involving the mafia, Cuba and rich, conservative Americans.

In "Nixon," Stone suggests President Nixon was manipulated and controlled by a wealthy cadre of Texas businessmen.

"There are a whole series of very major things," he said, adding he saw Nixon's schedule every day he was in office.

"There was no group of Texans that gave him orders," he said.

"It's a crazy idea that Nixon was a tool of some capitalist plot."

"That simply is an invention."

Kissinger said Stone presented Nixon as if every day in the White House was cocktail hour.

"Nixon was not a drinker," he said. "He never had a drink in his hand in the Oval Office."

He said Nixon had a low alcohol tolerance.

"It was not a permanent feature."

Kissinger said the whole character of Nixon was misrepresented.

"In both that movie and some television movie they had him ranting around the room yelling at people," he said.

"That wasn't his style. Nixon was — especially to people he did not know — very withdrawn."

After the movie premiered, Kissinger appeared on many talk shows and in newspapers and magazines speaking against the movie's historical presumptions.

"There are two types of problems," Kissinger said.

"One is there is really a question about the impact of democracy of filmmakers who are primarily interested in making money and having a sensation."

"When a newspaper writes an article or when an author writes a book, you can always ask for the right of reply and every responsible newspaper will give it to you," he said.

"If there's an inaccurate book written, you can write another book and that is within the means of everybody."

"When a studio spends $50 million on producing a movie, there is absolutely no way you can compete with this," he said.

Stone's "Nixon" stars Anthony Hopkins as Nixon and Joan Allen as Pat Nixon. Paul Sorvino played the role of Kissinger.

The movie is no longer in theaters.

Federal Pell Grants are still available to late '96-'97 financial aid applicants. Pell Grants are emitted based on a family's financial situation.

Moeder said the federal government looks at family income, amount of taxes family pays, family size, number of family members in college and the value of family assets such as businesses and real estate.

"There's no set cut-off for income or family size or number in college because as each one of those criteria changes, the whole formula adjusts," he said.

Moeder uses the example of a family that had an adjusted gross income of $80,000. This family qualified for all federal financial aid, including Pell Grants.

"On the surface, you would think that a family earning $80,000 dollars shouldn't qualify. The other side of this family's picture is they had eight people in the family, and six of those family members were currently in college," Moeder said. "So you can see, $80,000 dollars wouldn't go very far to pay for those educational expenses."

Late fall applicants will not be eligible for money from the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant. SEOG loans include college work study and the Federal Perkins Loan.

Scholarship deadline was Feb. 1, and the University should be finished awarding all scholarships for the '96-'97 academic year within a week.

"Students are being notified as they receive scholarships. Other award letters and scholarships will continue to be awarded weekly," Moeder said.

The financial aid office will continue to process 1996-'97 financial aid applications until the end of the next academic year. By May 1997, K-State will process about 26,000 applications for the 1996-'97 academic year, but not all applicants will accept the funding.

"A lot of those students are applying to multiple institutions and won't necessarily come to K-State, obviously because we don't have 26,000 students," Moeder said.

"But nonetheless their applications have to be processed for eligibility."

Kickers finish season as tourney champions

Shana Newell
sports editor

The K-State men's soccer club proved last weekend it can compete on a varsity level, even though it is not considered varsity by K-State's standards.

In the Laszlo Soccer Tournament in Wichita, the Wildcats defeated Central McPherson Community College, 1-0, Ottawa University, 1-0 and tied with Bethany (Okla.) College, 0-0, on their way to the quarterfinals of the tournament.

"We weren't playing as well on the first day. We were a little flat," K-

State soccer president Eric Fitzwater said. "Sunday we stepped it up."

Stepping it up is exactly what the Cats did as they went on to win the tournament.

In the quarterfinals, the Cats defeated Lamar College, 2-1, to advance to the semifinals where they again faced Central McPherson.

K-State dominated Central McPherson a second time to find itself in the championship game of the tournament where it defeated Newman College, 1-0.

Fitzwater said the wins were big for K-State because of its non-varsity status.

"All the teams we beat were varsity teams," Fitzwater said.

"It always makes us feel good (to beat varsity teams). A lot of times the other teams are talking trash, because they know we're not varsity and we're from a D-I (Division I) school."

K-State improved its season record to 6-2-3 after entering the tournament with only one win and a 1-1-3 record.

K-State will be losing three players to graduation in Brent Carpani, senior in mechanical engineering, Bart Vance, senior in management, and Jeff Sawarynski, senior in architectural engineering.

All three have been with the team for the last four or five years, Fitzwater said, and finishing out the season on such a high note was special for them.

"Especially for Brent and Bart who are both from Wichita," Fitzwater said.

"It was kind of good to go out that way for them."

Fans should expect more of the same from '96 Cats

In case you were one of many who were lost in the craziness of Garthstock this weekend, let me catch you up on some spring football news.

Fans got their first look at the 1996 edition of the K-State football team.

What can we conclude from the old purple vs. white scrimmage? The offense looked more than adequate. I mean, all that quarterback Brian Kavanagh did was throw for 453 yards and five touchdowns.

And who would he throw to now that Mitch Running and Tyson Schwieger were gone?

Well, Kevin Lockett looked like the same old Lockett. But it was newcomers Andre Anderson and Jimmy Dean who looked like they will fit in nicely. Anderson blew by defenders with four catches for 113 yards and two touchdowns. Dean caught three balls for 65 yards and one touchdown.

And just in case the Cats needed some more help at the wide-out position, Cat fans saw their version of Deion Sanders Saturday.

SHANE
McCormick

He is Chris Canty. Canty, an all-America safety, took his shot at the wide receiver position. The similarities between Canty and Sanders are numerous.

Both wore the No. 2 in college. Both were and are the best at their defensive position in the country.

And both have the tremendous ability to play the cornerback position and the wide receiver position.

This was the first time for Canty to take the wide-out position since high school.

But something tells me he could be a natural at the position. In Saturday's game, Canty took off on a fly route toward the end zone. The ball was underthrown a tad once it got there.

Canty stopped in the end zone, drawing contact from the cornerback. The pass was incomplete, but Canty drew the flag. After the game, Canty admitted to trying to draw the flag.

In his first game as a wide-out, Canty already looks like a pro. Maybe next season we will see more similarities between Canty and Sanders. I wonder if Canty has that end-zone dance down yet.

Everyone knows about the dynamic duo of Eric Hickson and Mike Lawrence at the running-back position.

But a third back emerged Saturday to show off his skills.

His name is Marlon Charles. Charles showed some blazing speed en route to 114 yards on 22 carries. Look for Charles to find some playing time this season.

Throughout the spring season so far, question marks have arisen about the defensive depth of the 1996 Cats.

I couldn't see the question marks on Saturday. Hey, just because offensive lineman Damion McIntosh and fullback Brian Goolsby played on the D-line this Saturday, it doesn't mean that much. I hope.

And let's not forget about the play of the special teams. Punter James Garcia booted seven punts, averaging over 41 yards. Included in those seven punts was a 54-yard boot.

What about the kicking game?

No Lin Elliot horror stories here. Martin Gramatica was a perfect 2-2 in field goals. But even more impressive is the distance he booted them from. His first one came from 45 yards. His second was from an incredible 52 yards. Gramatica's season high last year was from 32 yards.

As far as punt returns, we can conclude two things from Saturday's contest.

First, Canty will be handling the punt-return duties (yet another similarity with Sanders). Secondly — we know Canty can catch punts. Canty was ordered Saturday to not return any punts.

So we saw he can catch punts and let them go. Chris, we all want to see your highstepping abilities down the sidelines!

That other Kansas school had its spring game on Saturday also. But because of injuries to its gimp quarterbacks, Kansas was forced to cut its game short after two quarters.

In Glen Mason's system, the Jayhawks rewarded defensive stops and turnovers instead of touchdowns and field goals with points in their spring game.

I guess that's what a team is forced to do when it just doesn't have an offense.

Continuing the tradition

Shana Newell

When the K-State football program closed the doors on the 1995 season, it appeared it might have been closing the door on the Wildcats' explosive three-pronged receiving corps.

With the graduation of receivers Tyson Schwieger and Mitch Running, only Kevin Lockett remained as the sole tested patroller of the backfield.

But during the last seven seasons, seven different receivers have eclipsed the 1,000-yard receiving milestone at K-State.

While Schwieger and Running were two of those superstars, there appear to be plenty of hopefuls waiting in the wings to add to the list.

As seen in the 1996 spring football game, Coach Bill Snyder is working hard to find the right combination of receivers.

"We'll use whatever kind of structure gets the best players on the field. The question really is, do we have three quality receivers to put on the field, and I think that remains to be seen," Snyder said before the spring game.

In a contest where the two teams combined passed for 641 yards and the three-receiver set was used often, it appears Snyder has found the quality receivers he has been looking for — and there might be more than three.

Leading the list is senior Lockett. While Lockett had only five receptions for 65 yards, he said he was taken out of the game early to give some chances to his teammates.

"We wanted to get a lot of the young guys some snaps from Kav and Cody. Those will be the guys who determine how good we are," Lockett said.

Exactly who are those guys?

Listed on the two-deep roster are sophomores Troy Hackney and Brian Jackson and senior Jimmy Dean. Also receiving playing time at the wideout position was junior Andre Anderson and junior all-American Chris Canty, who surprised most of the fans in a Deion Sanders-like role.

Canty was considered one of 1995's top defensive backs in the nation last season as he intercepted eight passes and broke up 17 — the third-highest total in Big 8 history. But Snyder is looking at the possibility of having Canty on the offensive side of the game on occasion. In the spring game, Canty had one reception for 12 yards against the purples.

"He's going to get 10-20 reps a game at wide receiver. That's an absolute positive. He's smooth, graceful and probably the second-best route runner on the team behind Kevin Lockett," Dana Dimel, offensive coordinator, said.

"Chris will have an opportunity to do a lot of different things. He returned a punt in the bowl game, and he'll probably go into the spring as the No. 1 punt-return guy," Snyder said.

Dean and Anderson impressed K-State fans as they combined for three touchdowns, each from No. 1 quarterback Brian Kavanagh.

Anderson had four receptions for 113 yards, including a 55-yard touchdown pass. Dean tacked on 65 yards courtesy of three receptions.

Also impressing coaches and fans was sophomore Jackson.

He had four receptions on the day for 59 yards, including an 11-yard touchdown pass from Kavanagh.

With Dean, Anderson and Jackson spending time on last year's second team, Kavanagh said he felt comfortable throwing to each of them.

"Kevin's Kevin. And then there's Jimmy Dean, Andre Anderson, Brian Jackson, and then there's more after that," Kavanagh said.

"Those were the guys I threw to last year on the (second team), and I have all the confidence in the world in them."

Kavanagh is not the only Wildcat in uniform glad to have Dean, Anderson, Jackson and Canty on the field.

"Going into the season, a lot of teams are going to be focusing in on me, but with those guys out there throughout the season, those teams are going to learn they can't focus on me," Lockett said.

Other players receiving time at the wide receiver position included Deandre Robinson, who will not play next season but pulled in five passes for 61 yards.

Freshmen Martez Wesley and David Ries and senior Eddie Kidd should expect to see limited playing time at wideout.

The wide receivers are not the only players to look for passes on the gridiron.

Tight end junior Jarrett Grosdidier and sophomore Justin Swift had their share of receptions as they stepped into positions vacated by Bobby Latiolais and Brian Lojka.

Receiving the ball is something both said they expect to do often.

"The last couple years we've backed up some terrific tight ends in Bobby and Brian. But I think Justin and I are going to start doing some things now," Grosdidier said.

And do they did. Grosdidier had seven receptions for 86 yards, and Swift had 52 yards on six receptions.

"Jarrett and I have been sitting in the wings now for two years, and now it's time for us to step up. I think we're ready," Swift said.

► GOLF

Senior ends career with top performance

■ After 4 years of K-State golf, Trisha Hoover ends on positive note

Trevor Grimm

Just five holes into the Big 8 golf championships, it looked like it could be a long tournament for Trisha Hoover.

The senior from Phillipsburg had a rough start to the first day, sitting at five more than par after just five holes.

Things got somewhat better from there.

Hoover recovered enough to shoot an 81 the first day of the tournament, putting herself in good standing for the final two rounds.

"She hangs in there and shoots an 81, which I think was the fourth or fifth best score of the day," K-State coach Kristi Knight said.

Hoover followed that up with scores of 83 and 77 in the next two rounds to finish in a tie for eighth overall with Holly Duncan of Iowa State.

Apparently, the rough start to the tournament didn't phase Hoover, who played at K-State all four years of her eligibility.

"You just have to keep in there and tell yourself it was just a couple of holes that were bad and keep playing," Hoover said.

The tournament capped off a strong senior season for Hoover, who started her K-State career four years ago as a freshman when she made the team as a walk-on. By this year, Hoover was one of the main pillars on a young Wildcat team.

"Everybody on the team just adores Trisha," Knight said.

"She's a good person and has a great disposition on the golf course. She gets a little disgruntled when things don't go well, but she hangs in there."

Hoover has the experience to know how to handle most situations. She began playing golf at the age of 6 and has been playing competitively for about 10 years.

As a result of her experience, Hoover was in a leadership role this season, a role she said did not put too much pressure on her.

"I didn't really feel any added pressure," Hoover said. "I just went out there and played and just had fun with it, because I knew it was my last year."

Her experience might also have added to her consistency, as Knight said Hoover added stability to the young team.

"Trisha traveled to every tournament we went to and was probably the most consistent player on the team score-wise," Knight said.

Hoover's strengths include distance off the tee and her short game, Knight said.

"Those are two key things to your score — distance and getting the ball in the hole," Knight said.

As the Cats prepare to enter the competitive world of Big 12 golf, they will be looking for someone with strengths in those areas to replace the graduated Hoover.

Editor's note: Due to tradition, the names of those who tried out for Willie are changed so that people see Willie as Willie and not John Doe, who is Willie.

Brandeberry Indoor Complex was filled with K-State cheers during cheerleader, yell leader and Willie the Wildcat tryouts last week.

About 20 men and 35 women were there wanting to be a part of K-State's spirit squad.

"There's not as many people as last year," Sam Bushey, K-State cheerleading coach, said. "But the talent level has went up."

This year the required stunt for everyone was an extension, where the man holds the woman, who is standing, in his hands, then pushes her up with his arms fully extended and locked in place, Bushey said.

"The criteria for tryouts are based on appearance, jumps, tumbling, fight song, chants, partner stunts and dance," he said.

Bushey said he won't fill out all the squads at this time because there will be another try-out time in the fall.

"Those who don't make it now will have the summer to work at it and get the chance to try out again in the fall," he said.

Bushey said what he is looking for is people who are spirited, have a good personality and talent.

"There will be five to six couples for varsity and four to five couples for the JV, depends on the talent," he said.

Lissa Wayland, incoming freshman from Augusta, said she is a little nervous.

"I'm a freshman, and these girls are older than me," she said.

Wayland said she has been cheering for nine years, and collegiate cheering has been a goal of hers.

"My long-term goal is to be a cheerleading coach," she said.

Wayland said what makes her stand out from the other girls is her smile.

"I think people notice that, when people smile at them," she said.

Sharon Lin, junior in business management, said her only experience of cheering was her senior year of high school, and she has done gymnastics for 10 years.

"A couple of friends of mine encouraged me to try out," she said.

Lin said some of these people are intimidating because she was never taught the right way to do any of the stunts.

"This is kind of new to me," she said.

Charles Black, junior in engineering from Kansas Wesleyan University, has cheered at Kansas Wesleyan for the last two years and is transferring to K-State in the fall.

Black said his work ethic is what he feels gives him an advantage.

"The coaching here is a benefit," he said.

Black said he grew up in Manhattan and went the games when K-State wasn't doing so great.

"I give cheerleaders the respect when they have to cheer for a losing team," he said. "And now they have a winning team. I would think cheering is a lot more fun."

Black said he learns something new every time he practices.

Susan Hughes, junior in pre-vet, said her background experience is that she danced on her high school's drill team.

"I'm pretty prepared," she said. "The only thing is my stunting ability, but I'm working on that."

Hughes said she would bring her leadership ability and added talent to the squad.

"Also, I think my spirit and energy, and I always have a smile for the fans," she said.

Experience isn't everything. Bushey reminds everyone throughout the clinics that everyone is in the same boat.

"You're all equal. There is no one on the squad as of right now," Bushey said.

Curtis Johnson, incoming freshman from Topeka, said he is trying out mainly for social reasons and meeting people.

"I've cheered one year in high school, and I just thought it would be fun to do it in college, too," he said.

Johnson said he understands the fact that some people do not view yell leading as a sport, but he said it is a sport and should be respected as one.

Becca Lowry, junior in graphic design, said she likes the idea that returning members need to try out, too.

"There's a lot of new talent coming up, and new talent is good," she said.

Lowry, who has been a K-State cheerleader for three years, said she wants to come back for a fourth year because she loves K-State.

"If you have the talent, then you deserve to come back," she said. "This is just the scariest part — trying out."

Chris Coad, sophomore in advertising, said he can't remember why he tried out for yell leading at first.

"I just remember watching them at the games and thought it would be fun to do," he said.

Coad said he also agrees that no one should be guaranteed a spot after they have been on the squad before.

"Someone can come in and be an incoming freshman who is better than me, and I want the squad to be the best," he said.

Coad said he was nervous, but that helped him.

"But the nerves give you something extra to work for, and it gets your adrenalin pumping," he said.

Bushey said confidence is good, but not when it becomes someone winning and someone losing.

"We're looking for people who can work as a team," he said.

Lin said she is still a little nervous after days of practicing at the clinics.

"It's frustrating when I mess up," she said.

Wayland said she tries to put a little bit of her personality into the fight song and dance.

"Everything needs to hit on beat," she said.

Steve Jones, who is transferring in the fall, said he wanted to be Willie because it is motivating and fun.

"It's more the spirit by putting out a lot of energy," Jones said.

Jones has been Coffeyville

The Fortmeyer Files

by Russell Fortmeyer

This week Carol Oukrop

Director of A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications

Russell: What's your background with K-State?

Carol: I came to Kansas State University in 1969 as an assistant professor. In 1986, I became department head. A couple years later, we became a school, and I became a director.

Russell: As director, have you had to put out any big "fires" over the years?

Carol: You didn't really ask this, but I'll tell you. Probably the biggest fire, in terms of an awful lot of people getting in touch with me, was that blasted editorial "Don't eat beef; it will kill you."

That's the one time in my 10 years as an administrator that I was invited over to Anderson Hall. It seems like yesterday, but it must have been about three or four years ago. I still get the Kansas Livestock Association Newsletter. They put me on their mailing list.

Russell: Even though you don't advise the Collegian or the Royal Purple, you are the figurehead most people contact?

Carol: I'm automatically a member of the Board of Student Publications, but there are so many people who think that we're responsible for the Collegian even though we are not. I get a lot of input from people who are unhappy and sometimes happy. We get good comments as well.

Russell: You have a unique window into life here at K-State. How much have student issues changed? How much has the Collegian changed?

Carol: I don't know the issues have changed all that much. When I came, the Collegian was an absolutely wonderful college newspaper. I came here from a Big 10 school (University of Iowa) that also had a good paper.

I guess I have always been impressed — but not surprised — at how responsibly, sensibly and professionally the Collegian has run year after year after year.

We had a guest editor-in-residence several years ago from one of the big papers.

He just kept popping in here and saying, "I just don't believe you aren't over here at 4 o'clock in the morning having a nervous breakdown over the next day's paper." Often, I don't even read it until afternoon. It depends on how busy I am.

I don't lie awake nights wondering what is going to be in the paper any more than I lie awake nights worrying about the Mercury. They're both professionally run papers. I don't think that's changed.

Russell: How much has journalism changed in the years you've been here? Has the Collegian changed in the ways it reports issues?

Carol: I think a significant difference between 1969 and the early '70s is that journalism then was very cocky. It was very we-know-it-all and we-know-what's-good-for-you. It was much less concerned about producing what the public wanted. There was a kind of arrogance about the press that I think has changed.

One of the reasons it has changed is the circulation figures have changed. And the competition has changed. The feeling among the general public that the newspaper is the news source has changed.

Russell: Do we owe that to television?

Carol: Yes. A lot of what is going on now with the Internet and the web has brought some excitement back to the newspaper that was waning, maybe a little.

Russell: Are you a paper purist, or could you adapt to an all-electronic newspaper?

Carol: Oh man, I like to have it in my hand. I like to be able to clip it and stick it on my refrigerator and send it to my relatives and put it in a scrap book. If I have to adapt to an electronic one, I will.

I guess that's why I'm such a cheerleader for the community newspaper, because I have a feeling it will be around long after the big metros have gone electronic. I think the Marysville Advocate is going to be around longer than the New York Times.

Russell: Would you ever want to work for a newspaper again?

Carol: Oh, you bet. I still miss it. I miss it for some silly reason, particularly a crisis. When a tornado hits down the road, I somehow want to hop in a car and go there.

Russell: How have you put your imprint on the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications?

Carol: When I first came in, we were denied accreditation. Since then, we've had a couple of successful accreditation visits, and I feel good about that. I think I had something to do with us being a named school.

Russell: How hard was turning this into a school?

Carol: It was a longish process, but systematically working it through the bureaucracy it wasn't that difficult. This University isn't real used to name changes. I'll tell you one thing that helped was a very significant member of the Board of Regents at that time was one of our graduates. He had a nice relationship with Anderson Hall, and that didn't hurt.

Russell: Did incorporating into a school boost the program?

Carol: I'm absolutely convinced of it. I think a major way it has made a difference is fundraising. It's easier to give money to the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism than it is the department. We always should have been a school. We've been a program with a very strong professional component from the day we were born.

Russell: Why are you stepping down as director?

Carol: For 10 years, I have devoted my life to the school, and I would like to have an opportunity to go back to teaching and research for a while before I retire. It just seems like a really good time to step down. We just had another accreditation visit which was a successful one. My contract was up, and I don't want to do this for another five years.

Russell: What are the best experiences you've had as director of the school?

Carol: The three real high points were the dedication of the naming of us as a school, the "Week at K-State" book where all the former photographers came back and this past weekend for the Centennial. I was on a high last week.

One of the things I have loved about being here is the kind of togetherness that happens in the school of journalism. I just can't imagine a philosophy major making reservations a week in advance to come back for a reunion. There's a we-worked-you-to-death-you-just-gotta-love-us thing that happens here. Our students just aren't graduates, they're survivors.

Watermelons were just one of the main attractions that drew a crowd Sunday at Memorial Stadium.

The Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity and the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority presented "Chariot Relays with Watermelon Bust" Sunday at Memorial Stadium.

This was the first year the watermelon bust became a part of the philanthropy benefiting the Manhattan Special Olympics and Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA).

"The watermelon bust is a highly successful event that almost every other Lambda Chi chapter across the country holds," said Clayton Seese, Lambda Chi Alpha philanthropy chair, co-chair of the event and sophomore in architectural engineering.

Seese said the Lambda Chis invited the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority to help with the event because they wanted to develop a long-lasting and successful philanthropy that would be fun for everyone involved.

"After seeing the success of Watermelon Busts at other campuses, we thought this event would be the best opportunity to get the Thetas involved in," Seese said.

Seese said the competition was open to all greek houses and other living or social organizations.

"The Watermelon Bust is similar to the Olympics, except that every event involves a watermelon," said Sarah Cooper, Kappa Alpha Theta philanthropy chair, co-chair of the event and sophomore in elementary education and special education.

The event still had the traditional chariot relay race around the track of Memorial Stadium.

The Lambda Chis have sponsored the relays for more than 30 years.

The Gamma Phi Beta and Sigma Sigma Sigma sororities and the Tau Kappa Epsilon and FarmHouse fraternities participated in the event.

The first event of the day was the Chariot Relay, followed by the new Watermelon Bust event.

The events added to this year's competition were the seed-spitting contest, watermelon discus, watermelon-eating relay, watermelon toss, watermelon bowling and the watermelon obstacle course.

One of the most unusual events was the seed-spitting contest in which members of the participating group sat in chairs with bowls in their mouths. Then two members of their group proceeded to spit chunks of watermelons and seeds toward the bowl being held in the person's mouth.

The goal was to get as many seeds in the bowl as possible.

"I didn't realize at the time when I sat in the chair that I was going to be spit at," said Casey Hoffman, TKE house member and sophomore in accounting.

The Tri Sigmas and FarmHouse were the overall winners of the day's competitions, and each received a traveling trophy.

"I did the Chariot Relay, the watermelon toss, the watermelon bowling and the obstacle course, and I had a great time doing them," said Emily Dane, Tri Sigma member and freshman in psychology.

Other awards given during the day included the most valuable player award, which was given to Gamma Phi Meri Sias, and the TKE house received the most spirited award.

Gift certificates were given to the individual winners of each event.

"I think the day was a lot of fun, and it is a good foundation for the years to come," Seese said.

Seese said it is unclear what will become of the event in the future.

He said if the Watermelon Bust is a success, it is likely the Lambda Chis will continue to be host to the event with the Thetas as Lambda Chi's major philanthropy. They would move the Chariot Relays to the fall as one of the Lambda Chi's minor philanthropies.

The rain did not put a damper on the day's activities.

"The rain didn't stop the G-Phis from coming out and participating in the events," said Amy Eaton, Gamma Phi member and sophomore in Spanish and secondary education.

"It is always fun to come out and have fun with my sisters, regardless of whether we win or lose."

STUDENT PUBLICATIONS INC.

Board OKs annual budget, biweekly summer Collegian

Laurel Howell
staff writer

The Board of Student Publications approved the Student Publications Inc. fiscal year 1997 budget Monday.

The approved budget plan includes an increase in prices for campus phone books and the Royal Purple.

The phone book will cost students $3.25, and the Royal Purple will cost $24.95.

Lin Bliss, board secretary, expressed concern over the price of the phone book. He said the price had already been drastically increased.

Barry Flinchbaugh, board member and professor of agriculture, said there is room to increase prices without decreasing the demand of the publications.

"We made a case on fee increases and got turned down," Flinchbaugh said.

"With costs going up, we either have to cut something or increase some prices," he said.

Also included in the budget is funding for biweekly publication of the summer edition of the Collegian.

In other business, the board passed a motion to appoint an advisory board of Midwestern publishers and journalists, which will meet this summer to examine Student Publications Inc. and make recommendations.

The board will include Emerson Linn, publisher of the Iowa Register; Reid Ashe, publisher of the Wichita Eagle; Bruce Buchanan, vice president for newspapers for Harris Enterprises; Howard Kessinger, publisher of Marysville Advocate, and Laura Scott, deputy opinion editor at the Kansas City Star.

About an hour into the meeting, the board voted to go into executive session for 60 minutes to discuss non-elected personnel matters.

The board did not release any information or take any action on what happened during the executive session.

Those of us old enough to remember it were wowed when Timothy Leary spoke to us. This week we look at the counterculture, which is flourishing on the Internet.

Timothy Leary's Home Page

(<http://leary.com/>)
When he was here, Leary spoke of a homepage sometime in the future. That future is now and in color. The page is basically a tour of Tim's house with his own surprises being added to each room. Unfortunately, it is under construction but is still enjoyable to visit.

He has also written his page in Japanese. I suggest visiting the library. Hidden among the shelves of this cyber library are a few of Leary's works, including his first book, "The Psychedelic Experience."

I also recommend all Leary fans read "A Loving Inter-Change with Yoko Ono." In it, Timothy discusses his death. According to Leary, "The preparations for my Sui-Cide have already begun. Every stage in the process is being filmed, and some of it will be broadcast on the World Wide Web," Leary said.

Leary will be missed when he goes, but even in death he is pushing the envelope.

HotWired: Special — Free Speech First

(<http://www.hotwired.com/special/lawsuit/>)
From the makers of the most popular magazine about the Internet online or off, a new way to protest the government: Sue it. For those against the restrictions of the 1996 Telecommunication Act, here is a place to take action. Voice your disapproval of the government trying to interfere with our First Amendment rights by signing up. After users fill out a form, their names join the list of more than 11,000 others in a lawsuit against the TelCom act. My one complaint here is the corporate sponsorship. I'm not too fond of pages that are out there for public service, also being used for billboards.

The Bird, The Alternative Truth Since 1968

(<http://www.thebird.com/>)
If you're looking for the alternative of the alternative look no further The Bird is too beyond the edge.

Whether you're looking for the 90-foot-tall Texas Parrot that forced Ross Perot out of the presidential race this year or the new scratch-and-sniff plug in for Netscape, this is your place.

The wild Devil Dogs that are roaming in this area are neglected by normal papers, not the bird. It tells of how people in "WICHITA, KANSAS" are shaking in fear because of these dogs that roam the country-side. For some strange reason, though, these dogs seem to look a lot like goats.

Karl's Battle with the IRS

(<http://www.cs.cmu.edu/~karl/govt/irs.html>)
Here we get to see Karl's epic battle with the U.S. government about the personal income tax. Karl believes government has taken over way too much power and violates the Constitution. Don't expect glitzy graphics. It's basic text with only his name changing color from black but has important information.

Word of the week: droid

Droids are people who blindly do what they're told. They follow directions like a robot. It also refers to jobs where people repeat the same actions repeatedly. Telemarketing and fast food are the most noticeable droid jobs.

► MIA/POW Run

Race raises money for scholarships

QUICKREAD

► The first MIA/POW 5K run was conducted Monday. It generated money for the Grimm Memorial Scholarship commemorating prisoners of war.

Khristi Shell
staff reporter

Instead of the run for the roses, it is the run for the money.

The first race of the MIA/POW Run got off on foot Monday to raise money for the Grimm Memorial Scholarship and to commemorate prisoners of war and those missing in action.

"It is recognition of the people that have been prisoners of war just because of their duty to our country and to just earn money for the people who deserve it," said Lennea Montandon, recipient of the 1996-97 Grimm scholarship.

The race was small this year because it was the first run, and it was a learning experience, Montandon said.

About 30 to 40 people turned out for the 5K run starting at City Park, through campus past the MIA/POW memorial and back to the City Park.

The participants included students, Air Force and Army ROTC and some people from Fort Riley.

"Hopefully, next year it will be a lot bigger, be a little more organized and a little more known publicly," Montandon said.

Next year, the organizers hope to get 100 people in the race, she said.

They want to try to make it an annual event so people will start knowing about it, recognize it and do it every year.

Registration for the run was $15, and the participants received a free T-shirt.

The remaining money went to the scholarship fund.

The Grimm Memorial Scholarship was founded last year by the father of Capt. William Grimm. Grimm, an Air Force ROTC cadet at K-State, was killed in Desert Storm. He was on a fire support mission with the Marine Corps when his plane got shot down. He received the Silver Star and the Purple Heart for his service in Desert Storm.

The scholarship is offered to Air Force ROTC cadets who show excellence in military leadership and in everything they do by setting examples, Montandon said.

"It's for them and people who show financial need," she said.

Speaker defines transsexualism

► Lecturer tells story of realizing her true gender identity

Marci McNeal
staff reporter

She has been married for 40 years. She has three children. She is a man.

Jane Newman is a man who lives part time as a man and part time as a woman. Newman gave a presentation Monday on transsexualism as a part of the Colloquium series presented by the Department of Psychology. Newman opened her lecture by defining what a transsexual is.

"A transsexual is someone whose gender identity is fundamentally and irrevocably incompatible with their biological sex, regardless of whether or not they plan to take steps toward sexual reassignment surgery," Newman said.

Newman explained a transsexual is interested in gender identity whereas a crossdresser or transvestite is interested in gender expression.

"I consider myself a bigendered transsexual," Newman said.

Newman said bigendered transsexuals are people who choose for some reason to live part of the time in their biological sex and part of the time in the gender of their mind.

"I did work as a male all of my life, however," Newman said.

Newman said she was raised in a loving family with six children.

"My mother had two girls and four boys, that is, if I can be considered one of the boys," Newman said.

Newman was raised and socialized as a male, and it was not until the age of 11 or 12 that she first became aware of the gender feelings.

"I started to try on my mother's clothing in secret," Newman said. "Around my early teen years, I would babysit for my sister's children and would also try on my sister's clothing."

At the age of 19, Newman entered the monastery, which did not allow the opportunities to express the feminine feelings Newman had.

"In 1952, when I was watching the news in the monastery when a story ran about someone who had a so-called sex-change operation in Denmark," Newman said.

Newman then realized that whatever the person on the news had and was going through, she was going through the same thing. Newman spent a total of five years in the monastery.

She said when she got out of the monastery, there were not outlets available to help her with her feelings like there are today. She then decided to get on with her life as a man.

"I then met a wonderful woman that I fell in love with, and last January we celebrated 40 years of marriage," Newman said.

"I thought at the time that my female feelings would just go away. When they didn't, I tried to put it out of my mind."

Newman said that as time went on, she still would wear women's clothes when the opportunity was given. She finally told her wife about her gender feelings 10 years into the marriage.

"We didn't deal with it too much, we kind of acted like it didn't exist," Newman said.

When Newman reached her early 50s she got to the point that she could no longer avoid facing her feelings, and her family had to deal with the issues.

"I have three children, one son and two daughters," Newman said. "I also have two grandchildren and two more on the way."

Newman said her son and daughter-in-law are willing to see her and experience her as a woman, but her two daughters prefer not to.

"My children are very loving and accepting of me as their father, though," Newman said.

Newman said due to her age and family situation, she has not decided to live 100 percent of the time as a woman.

"I have been on female hormones for much of the last seven years, and I have been castrated," Newman said.

She said she was not ready to go full-time, because she did not want to deny her children and grandchildren their father and grandfather.

Newman said she has come out to some people about her gender issues, while others still know her only as a man.

Newman said she would not wish her situation on anybody, but on the other hand, it is a wonderful experience in life.

"I've had some unique experiences and insights that most people don't get in this journey," Newman said.

Newman said at the beginning of her speech that sex is between the legs and gender is between the ears.

Topeka man takes corpse from Kansas to New York

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The argument in the 1993 Mazda apparently became bloody in eastern Kansas. But Angel Rivera kept driving. And driving.

More than 2,000 miles and two days later, he arrived in New York City — via Colorado — to see his family. Next to him in a reclined bucket seat was the corpse of his longtime live-in girlfriend, Trudy Poley.

On Monday, authorities accused Rivera, 35, of stabbing the 30-year-old woman to death last Friday during a roadside argument. Family members convinced him to give up and confess Sunday after making the grisly discovery.

"Where's Trudy?" police said Rivera's sisters had repeatedly asked when he showed up alone for dinner at a Bronx restaurant.

"In the car," was his only reply.

Sensing trouble, the sisters checked the Mazda and found the body under a jacket, a pool of blood at its feet. One family member immediately drove the car to a nearby police station; others brought in Rivera moments later.

Rivera grew up in the Bronx but moved to Topeka several years ago.

Authorities in Topeka — where Poley's family reported her missing Saturday — did not immediately seek extradition.

"It could be New York will prosecute," said Lt. Patty Kacberle of the Topeka Police Department. "New York has him. New York has her."

Rivera told investigators that his gruesome odyssey began at about 11:30 a.m. Friday in Lawrence. The victim was driving to her telephone company job when she and Rivera, then a passenger, began arguing over his unemployment, Capt. John Dillon, a Bronx detective, said.

After Poley pulled over, Rivera stabbed her six times in the chest, apparently killing her instantly, police said. He then pushed her body to the passenger side, reclined the seat and concealed her with a coat.

Shortly after, Rivera drove the Mazda to the home of Poley's sister, but told the woman he did not know the victim's whereabouts, police said.

The suspect then began driving aimlessly, Dillon said. He traveled to Denver, before doubling back toward the Bronx. At some point, he threw the murder weapon — a knife — out the window.

Poley's body, because it was covered and prone, "could have looked like a person taking a nap," Dillon said when asked how Rivera avoided suspicion. Police found the corpse in the same position when it was delivered to the 48th Precinct station house, Detective John Wynn said.

"That's the first time we've had someone do that with a body," he said.

Community College's Red Raven mascot.

"I don't see a difference between the crowds," Jones said.

"And it's a good way to meet people," he said. "And it's actually fun."

The hardest part about being a mascot is not being able to talk, Jones said.

"Once the children know you can't talk, they ask yes-or-no questions," he said.

John Downs, junior in hotel restaurant management, was trying out for his second year.

"It's organized craziness," Downs said. "You can get away with whatever you want, because you're the number-one fan."

What makes this job hard is that there is no pay or scholarships, Downs said.

"And that we have a kick-ass football team that scores a lot of points, which means lots of push-ups for me," he said.

When you are a fan you don't get to be on the field or the court, Downs said.

"As Willie, I get to do both," he said.

Downs said the characteristic he possesses which give him the edge is that he thinks the fans are first — they're his priority.

"There are so many pluses with this that they out way the minuses," Downs said.

Downs said he practiced hands signals, body gestures and spelling things out to avoid speaking with fans.

"Everyone wants to talk with you, and you can't," he said.

Downs said he did not tell anyone he was Willie because it is suppose to be a secret.

"And I keep it a secret as much as possible," he said.

There is no official rule that says the identity is to be kept secretive. It is more a deep tradition, Downs said.

"I like when people see Willie doing something crazy, and the fans say that's Willie and not John Downs, oh, that's just him," he said.

After the tryouts were through, everyone looked relieved.

Johnson said he did the best he could. "I had a great try out," he said. "I'm going away happy."

Wayland said she was pleased with herself.

"I came up wanting to do the best I could and did so," she said. "I feel I've accomplished my goal."

Coad said he was a bit more nervous during his tryout.

"But I kind of lost my nerves when I was out there," he said.

Lin said she thought her tryout went OK.

"At the end, we were supposed to make up the last five seconds. And I was concentrating too much where I forgot my routine," she said. "I was shaking the whole time."

Black was unable to tryout due to a conflict, but he said he would be here for the fall, Bushey said.

Hughes said because she had real bad shin splints, there was no way she could have tried out.

"I will definitely try out in the fall," she said.

Bushey said he was proud of everyone, and they all did an incredible job.

"The improvement I saw this week — I am just so proud," he said.

This is the most talented group that has tried out at K-State, Bushey said.

"If you don't make the squad now," Bushey said, "don't forget about tryouts in the fall."

The members of the 1996-1997 K-State yell leading squad are Chris Helvey, Brody Dorland, Ashley Edwards, Casey O'Conner, Matt Craig, Chris Coad, Will Robinson, Mark Ford, Jeremy Wheeler and Will Schwab.

The cheerleaders are Abby Parish, Erin Fenne, Amy Hill, Amanda Betzen, Stephanie Symes, Maggie Irvin, Tonya Jones, Sharon Lin, Hope Harris and Brook Howard.

And Steve Jones got one of the two spots for Willie the Wildcat.

At press time Bushey did not have the dates for the fall tryouts.

telephone went dead this morning. He was driven out by the fire he set.

The gunman was taken to Royal Hobart Hospital for treatment for burns, but he did not have any gunshot wounds. He will probably be charged with multiple murder on Tuesday or Wednesday, police said. Under Australian law, they may not speculate on his motives until he comes to trial. There is no death penalty in Australia.

Tasmanian reporters said the man had a history of psychiatric problems.

Police said 25 of the people killed were Australians. Two Malaysians and an Indian also died. Not all the victims carried identification.

One American and two Canadians were wounded along with at least 15 other people, hospital officials said.

The American was identified by a family friend, Debbie Burton, as Dennis Olson of Vancouver, Wash. Police, who refused to identify the American, said only that he was not badly hurt, and he was released from the hospital today.

Four of the wounded were in critical condition.

"Some of the deceased were sitting there as if they were enjoying their meals," police Superintendent Jack Johnston said. "Their meals were still on the table. Blood was everywhere."

About 1:30 p.m. on Sunday, the blond gunman drove up to the prison in a mustard-colored Volvo hatchback with a surfboard strapped on top and talked casually with some of the 500 people outside, police said.

"He said, 'There's a lot of WASPs around today, there's not many Japs here, are there?' and then started muttering to himself," a survivor, who was not identified, told the radio.

The man then walked into the cafe and started shooting.

"He wasn't going bang-bang-bang — it was 'bang' and then he'd pick someone else out and line them up and shoot them," witness Phillip Milburn told the radio.

After the shootings in the cafe, the gunman walked outside and turned his rifle on tourists near a bus, killing four more people, including the bus driver.

He picked off others as they arrived in cars and shot at people as they ran away.

He shot a mother and the 3-year-old daughter in her arms. The woman's 6-year-old daughter tried to hide behind a tree, but the gunman killed her, too.

He kidnapped an Australian man at a gas station and stole a car to drive three miles to a bed-and-breakfast cottage owned by David and Sally Martin, a couple in their 60s.

He used military-type rifles, an AR-15 and an SKS assault rifle, Deputy Police Commissioner Richard McCreadie said.

By early today, more than 200 police had surrounded the Seascope inn.

Police tried to negotiate by phone with the gunman, who fired at them and at helicopters airlifting out the dead and wounded.

The gunman demanded a helicopter for himself, but negotiations broke down when the battery in his

Carol: I came to K-State with a second-grader and a fourth-grader. I've had them on my own since my daughter was five weeks old and my son was 2. Sure, it's difficult, but it's difficult to rear kids with two-parent families.

Russell: I noticed your Elizabeth "Grandma" Layton print. Did you know the artist?

Carol: No, the Kansas Press Women took her in as a patron, and she was not able to be at the luncheon. She had several signed copies of her prints we were able to buy as part of the scholarship program. I love that painting.

Russell: Do you consider yourself an empowered woman?

Carol: Darn betcha. I may be getting old, but I still got a lot of things to do — which is what she was saying there.

Russell: How much has the Collegian covered squirrel issues?

Russell: Should it?

Carol: Not particularly.

Russell: Is it an issue we should focus on more often?

Carol: Not in my book.

2 militia members arrested with stockpile of pipe bombs

Associated Press

MACON, Ga. — Two militia members arrested with a stockpile of bombs had joked about sending a bloodied Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms jacket to the agency's Macon office, a federal agent testified Monday.

The testimony came as Robert Edward Starr III and William James McCranie Jr. appeared before a federal judge for a bond hearing.

U.S. District Judge Wilbur Owens said he would rule Friday.

Starr's attorney, Nancy Lord, acknowledged her client had made incriminating statements in the presence of an informant.

But she said Starr was only trying to root out the bomb-making faction of his militia group.

"He suspected there were folks wanting to make bombs and he was trying to find out who those folks were," Lord said.

ATF agent Stephen W. Gillis testified that Starr and McCranie joked about punching holes in an ATF jacket and covering it with rabbit blood and sending it to the agency's Macon office.

"Bob Starr thought it was a good idea," Gillis said.

The two men were arrested Friday after the ATF raided their homes in Roberta, a rural town 24 miles west of Macon, confiscating 10 pipe bombs.

An informant told agents they planned to build and distribute bombs. Authorities say Starr, 34, and McCranie, 30, are members of the Georgia Republic Militia Group, which is believed to have 11 to 15 members.

Relatives and supporters of the two men packed the courtroom at U.S. District Court, forcing some to stand along the walls.

Outside the building, a small group of men said they sympathized with the accused. "We belong to a group of like-minded individuals," Bob Peacock of Birmingham, Ala., said.

Police search for rapist

■ Manhattan woman falls prey to stranger who rapes her at knife point

Portia Sisco
staff writer

Riley County Police Department is actively seeking a suspect in a rape that occurred early Tuesday morning.

About 2:30 a.m., the victim was pulled out of her car on the northeast side of Manhattan at knife point.

"She was kidnapped and ordered to commit a sexual offense," Steve French, RCPD captain, said.

The suspect took an undetermined amount of money and ordered the victim to drive him to Junction City, where she dropped him off in the Washington Street area.

"She was taken from her vehicle. It was luck, or unluck of the draw. There was no preplanning or targeting," French said.

The victim notified the Geary County Police Department, who then called RCPD at 5:10 Tuesday morning.

"Just driving over to Junction City created a time lapse, which is what the perpetrator had in mind," French said.

The police do not believe this rape is related to any of the three rapes that are currently under investigation by the Pottawatomie Police Department, French said.

"This isn't the normal case. I don't think there was anything she could have done any differently," French said.

Several rapes have occurred recently where the victim is alone sunbathing or jogging, French said.

"Don't go out alone. If you go out bicycling, stick to areas frequented by these kind of activities," French said.

Three different agencies are involved in this case.

The police in Wamego, Junction City and Manhattan are all working on it, French said.

The suspect is a black male in his late 20s or early 30s.

He is 5-foot-11 and weighs 186 pounds. The police believe he is a resident of Manhattan, French said.

The suspect is wanted for questioning concerning charges of rape, kidnapping and aggravated robbery.

"We hope to catch him before he gets out of town," French said.

Union revokes check policy that identifies race, gender

Bill Bontempo
staff writer

Bernard Pitts, director of the K-State Student Union, decided to suspend the policy of using gender and race to identify check writers at the Union.

Pitts decided the policy needed to be reviewed by the Union Governing Board and the Union Policy Committee after an article in Tuesday's Collegian brought potential problems with the policy to his attention.

While there was a legal opinion that the gender and race policy was a viable option for identifying check writers, Pitts said he will look for another alternative.

"I don't believe the policy reflects the position the Student Union would like to project," Pitts said.

Pitts will meet with Jack Thoman, Union business manager, today to discuss check-collecting options.

"We will look at other means as a way of collecting on bad checks," he said.

Thoman said the Riley County attorney's office has helped the Union collect on bad checks in the past, and the policy of including gender and race on checks was suggested by the office.

The Union will now explore the possibility of using local collection agencies and requiring two forms of identification for check writers, Thoman said.

Thoman said using local collection agencies such as Checkrite would increase Union operating costs and increase penalties to bad check writers.

Some collection agencies charge an additional $30 to the check writer for money they collect.

Kassebaum to give anniversary lecture

Sarah Lunday

Honoring the 30th anniversary of the Landon Lecture Series, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., will deliver the 107th lecture at 10:30 a.m. Sept. 9 in McCain Auditorium.

Kassebaum

Kassebaum's visit is symbolic, said Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series. The lecture series began in honor of Kassebaum's father Alf Landon, a former Kansas governor and presidential candidate. Kassebaum also presented the Landon Lecture Sept. 9, 1987, which was her father's 100th birthday. "We have invited her to start the next 30 years," Reagan said.

Kassebaum was invited to speak last November and confirmed in February. The retiring U.S. Senator is expected to speak about her years in community service.

During September, the Landon Lecture Series will present an exhibition of pictures and posters featuring previous speakers. The exhibit will be on display at McCain.

Committee to investigate improving campus safety

Gina Garvin
staff reporter

Making college campuses safer is the ultimate goal of a newly formed campus task force.

State Attorney General Carla Stovall formed the Campus

Awareness Makes for Protection and Ultimate Safety, CAMPUS committee, to help generate ideas on how to make college campuses safer.

"Attorney General Stovall's overall goal is to have members on the committee look at what they feel are important safety issues and then act on those proposals," Mary Horsch, director of communications, said.

Those invited to be on the CAMPUS committee include representatives from the Kansas Board of Regents schools, presidents of the 19 community colleges and 17 area vocational schools, police officers from college towns and cities and parents and students from the schools.

The representative from K-State will be Susan Scott, associate dean of student life. Scott also serves on the Police Oversight and Campus Safety Committee at K-State.

"It's premature to focus on exactly what issues I would like to see come from K-State until after our first meeting," Scott said.

The first meeting of the committee will be sometime in May and continue on a monthly basis through next December.

CAMPUS was formed in response to the recent death of a Kansas college student, when Kansans began to question exactly what circumstances led to that death, Stovall said.

K-State students will be consulted on what they feel are the most important safety issues.

"I will definitely go to the students, as well as the different campus safety committees to get their input on the different safety issues affecting our campus," Scott said.

Another important issue that Scott wants to focus on is continuing the safety measures that K-State already has.

► GARTH BROOKS VISITS LOCAL BAR AFTER SATURDAY PERFORMANCE

Like a ghostly spirit watching the crowd, Garth Brooks sat at a corner table in Kickers Bar & Grille Saturday night after his concert at Bramlage Coliseum.

Tony Gooden, owner of Kickers, said he is not sure why Garth stopped by.

"It wasn't very long," he said. Brooks came in through the back door, Gooden said.

"To avoid the fanfare," he said. Gooden said it was nice of Brooks to come by, but he wishes he could have announced it so people knew.

"But it probably wouldn't have been right," he said.

Gooden said some friends of his might have arranged it.

"I don't know how you would describe it," he said. "It was an honor."

Gooden said Brooks had a beer and sat in the corner. Then he left.

"We didn't want to make it an issue that he was there," he said.

Becky Newbury, sophomore in pre-medicine and lead vocalist for Foolish Pleasure, the band performing that night, said she had heard the rumor circulating, but there was nothing to it.

"That place was so packed," she said. "I didn't notice him walk in at all."

The guitar player for Foolish Pleasure came over to Newbury while they were performing and said Garth Brooks was there, Newbury said.

"It's great he showed up, but the place was so packed we just had a great time playing," she said.

Newbury said she wishes she could have said something to Brooks.

"Just to say 'Hey, it was nice of you to show up.' You know a musician-to-musician thing, not a lengthy conversation," she said.

Newbury and her band Foolish Pleasure performed one of Brooks' songs, "The Dance," while Brooks was there.

"Tell you the truth, we do that song in the third set as the last song," she said. "It's on our list of songs that we always do."

Newbury said because she is a female vocalist performing one of Brooks' songs, she had to change the key of the song.

At press time, a Brooks representative was unavailable for comment.

Brooks left Manhattan Saturday to go to Kansas City's Kemper Arena for his next four performances.

► BOY APPEARS WELL-ADJUSTED AFTER REUNION WITH BIRTH PARENTS

CHICAGO (AP) — One year after a weeping Baby Richard reached for his adoptive mother while his biological father carried him to a car, the 5-year-old boy is happy and well-adjusted, a psychologist says.

The youngster with the tousled mop of blond hair is happy living with his birth parents, smiles readily and shows a special fondness for Batman, Nintendo and Chicken

McNuggets, say those who work closely with him.

"There are no signs of trauma, no eating or sleeping problems, no withdrawal, no angry outbursts, no asking for the other family," says Karen Moriarty, a clinical psychologist who visits the boy once a week.

But the custody switch that followed a 3 1/2-year court battle has had an unsettling aftermath all the same.

Couples are more wary of domestic adoptions, fearing U.S. courts may return children to their birth families, experts said. And the couple who took care of Baby Richard for the first four years of his life will mark today's anniversary by beginning a nationwide crusade to expand the rights of adoptive families.

► MIDWEST STORMS FLOOD AREA

ROCKFORD, Ind. (AP) — Torrential rain across much of the Midwest sent rivers over their banks, forcing hundreds of evacuations.

As the flood-swollen White River jumped its banks and crept within inches of Danny and Anne Williams' home, they kept a wary eye on a back-yard bench mark — a wooden bird house half-covered in water.

"That's my danger zone marker," said Williams, who lives in Rockford, about 70 miles south of Indianapolis. "When I can't see it, I know I'm in trouble."

A storm system that dumped as much as 9 inches of rain on the region since Sunday moved south today, leaving a trail of flooded homes.

► PEROT BACKERS SEEK SUPPORT

DALLAS (AP) — Nine states down and 41 to go.

Ross Perot's supporters are seeking to get his Reform Party recognized as a third party before November, but it's a tougher job than in 1992 when the Texas billionaire mounted an independent presidential bid.

For instance, in many states the party has had to fall back on paid petition gatherers, as well as volunteers, to ensure it gets enough signatures.

"It's hard to detect the kind of spontaneous wave of enthusiasm as in 1992. It may be out there, but it's hard to see it," said Lewis Gould, a Perot watcher and presidential historian with the University of Texas.

SUCCESS at K-State Salina

The SUBSONIC AIRCRAFT: CONTRAIL AND CLOUD EFFECTS SPECIAL STUDY, or SUCCESS program developed by NASA will study the effects of aircraft exhaust while based at K-State Salina.

■ The project, which started April 8 and will continue through mid-May, will determine the effect of fuel exhaust on the environment by measuring the size of the particles released in the atmosphere.

■ It will also study the effect on the climate through the formation of contrails, or aircraft exhaust. The data will be useful to many nations that want to regulate aircraft exhaust internationally.

■ Salina was picked for its long runway at Schilling Air Force Base and its fair weather climate that will provide the scientists with plenty of days to launch aircraft missions.

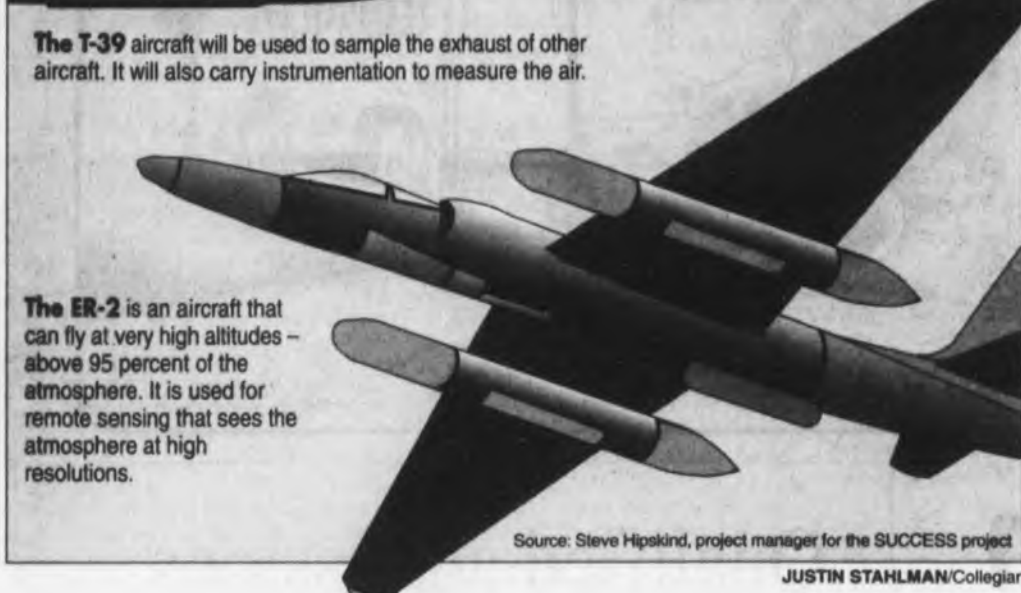

Three aircraft are being deployed in Salina for the project.

The T-39 aircraft will be used to sample the exhaust of other aircraft. It will also carry instrumentation to measure the air.

The DC-8 has been equipped with scientific instruments that will measure everything from clouds' ice crystals to water droplets.

The ER-2 is an aircraft that can fly at very high altitudes—above 95 percent of the atmosphere. It is used for remote sensing that sees the atmosphere at high resolutions.

JUSTIN STAHLMAN/Collegian

Salina campus functions as site for NASA tests

Tom Roesler
staff reporter

NASA has developed the SUCCESS program to study the effects of aircraft exhaust and is performing tests at K-State Salina.

The SUCCESS program stands for Subsonic Aircraft: Contrail and Cloud Effects Special Study. Steve Hipskind, project manager for the SUCCESS project, said it is looking at the environmental effects of subsonic aircraft. The project was started April 8 and will continue throughout the middle of May.

Salina was picked for a couple of reasons, said Mary Calentine, public information officer at K-State-Salina. One reason was the long runway Salina can provide because of the Schilling Air Force Base, which was located there.

Climate was another reason. Calentine said Salina has what is called a fair weather climate. That means the weather there is going to provide the scientists with plenty of days to launch aircraft missions.

One area they are trying to find out about is how much of the exhaust the aircraft dumps into the atmosphere is composed of bad elements and what effect they have on the environment.

Another objective being studied is the effect on the climate through the formation of the contrails.

"The contrails can act like a thermal blanket," Hipskind said. "The outgoing thermal radiation is trapped and warmed."

Hipskind said contrails are what is put out of the aircrafts' engines during flight. The SUCCESS project is trying to better determine if there are enough contrails to have an effect and if there are; whether they warm or cool the climate.

To figure this out, measurements of the clouds' composition are made, along with measurements of exhaust from subsonic aircraft during flight.

Three aircraft are being deployed in Salina for the project. The ER-2 is an aircraft that can fly at high altitudes.

"It can fly above 95 percent of the atmosphere. We use it for remote sensing to look at the atmosphere at high resolutions," Hipskind said.

The ER-2 will be used as a surrogate satellite to relay sensory readings of the atmosphere to the headquarters.

NASA will also use the DC-8 and the T-39 aircraft. The DC-8 was completely gutted and replaced with scientific instruments. These instruments will be used to measure the clouds' composition.

Hipskind said everything in the cloud regions would be studied, including ice crystals and the water droplets themselves.

The T-39 aircraft will be used to sample the exhaust of other aircraft. It too will carry instrumentation to measure the air.

Hipskind said the project is important in finding out the effect of the contrails by being able to figure out the size of the particles released in the atmosphere.

"If we're trying to determine a particle's size, we can make an exact calculation. With the aircraft we actually get the ground truth or actual size," Hipskind said.

Another reason this project is important is many nations want to regulate aircraft exhaust internationally. This is similar to the regulations that are in the auto manufacturing industry today.

"It's important that we as a nation know what the scientific issues are and what regulations make sense and what don't," Hipskind said. "The U.S. wants to position itself with appropriate knowledge."

Calentine said the community is happy to have NASA come to Salina and has responded openly.

"Many of the people that have been working on this mission have truly appreciated their reception," Calentine said.

The people in the community have been friendly as well as the scientists themselves who have gone out of their way to be helpful.

Calentine said 60 fifth-graders came to learn about the SUCCESS project for their field trip even though NASA could not guarantee what they were going to see.

The scientists showed them plenty. One gave the children a 30-minute demonstration on how to put on the pressurized suit the pilots wear.

Another invited them into the weather room so they could see the weather patterns on the high tech equipment. Someone else involved in the program spent 20 minutes of his own time to explain what they were doing on this mission.

The mission has been a great one for everyone involved, including the community, campus and NASA, Calentine said.

"They have been so accommodating to the community, it's phenomenal," she said.

It's important that we as a nation know what the scientific issues are and what regulations make sense and what don't.

Fine Arts Council changes time, location of meetings

Richea Lecklider
staff reporter

The Fine Arts Council discussed new members, a new meeting time and possibly a new meeting location Tuesday morning.

Elizabeth Hochberg, who was already a member, was appointed as the chair of the council. There are also three new appointed members, as well as three newly elected members for next year.

Hochberg decided the council should meet at a new time next year rather than the time they met this year, which was 7:30 a.m., so there could be more members attending. The council decided to meet in the late afternoon or early evening, whichever is found to work best for members' schedules.

It was also mentioned that the meeting place for the council might be moved to the Office of Student Activities and Services upon approval by Student Governing Association.

Other items that were announced included an intention to begin an attendance policy and the revising of the bylaws and constitution of the Fine Arts Council.

Anna Holcombe, member of the council and head of the Department of Art, requested $2,565 for improvements to Willard Gallery. The improvements would include closing off one wall and putting in four removable walls to increase exhibition space for two-dimensional art.

Holcombe also requested obtaining more money to pay for a gallery technician to work more hours monthly.

This would be done to expand the duties of that employee to include publicity and to better cover the duties involved with the installation of exhibits. She requested $144 more to pay the gallery technician for 48 hours of work per month at $8 per hour. The gallery technician is paid for 30 hours of work per month at $8 hour, which comes to $240.

Both of Holcombe's requests were voted upon and approved.

Finally, members again discussed the idea of organizing specific categories that all the organizations on campus will fall within. This will be done so each organization knows exactly where to go to request funding.

Chris Avila, council member, explained the seven categories the organizations might fall under, and he said six of those would not apply to Fine Arts Council as far as obtaining funding.

Royal Purple yearbooks are available in Kedzie 103. The cost is $25.

Although it might seem like a royal hassle, you will thank yourself in the future if you pick up a Royal Purple yearbook now.

Today is the last day the yearbooks will be distributed from the trailer parked outside the K-State Student Union. After today, yearbooks will be available in the Student Publications Inc. office, in Kedzie 103. Yearbooks can also be purchased for $25.

But do not get the yearbook to make the Royal Purple staff happy. Pick it up because you are probably one of the 8,000 students featured in it.

Pick up your yearbook knowing that it is the largest and cheapest yearbook in the Big 8 Conference.

The 1996 Royal Purple has 512 pages. The only school in the Big 12 with a bigger yearbook is Texas A&M, whose yearbook, the AggieLand, is 864 pages.

Pick up your Royal Purple knowing it is one of the best available. For the past six years, it is the only yearbook in the nation to have won both the Associated Collegiate Press Pacemaker award as well as Columbia Scholastic Press Association's Gold Crown award, considered the Pulitzer of collegiate journalism.

Most importantly, pick up the yearbook because it is full of history. It will occupy just minimal space on your bookshelf for the rest of your life.

The Royal Purple is important. Granted, not everyone would agree. Just know that anyone who buys the Royal Purple is helping continue a K-State tradition. Go pick up or buy your copy of the yearbook. You will be glad you did, and you will have nobody to thank but yourself.

U.S. has interest in Russian elections

America is gripped in concern about the upcoming presidential election in November.

As in the past, American citizens, as well as the press, have begun to examine candidates' pros and cons regarding issues both domestic and foreign. After all, the individual elected will have a great effect on our country, as well as the world, in the next four years.

There is another upcoming election, though, which is just as important to our country as the election in November. The Russians will soon be having their own presidential elections in June. Current Russian President Boris Yeltsin has a direct competitor, communist Gennady Zyuganov. Should Russia have a Communist at its helm, Yeltsin has warned that it could lead to "chaos and war."

Yeltsin, in an address given in Kazakhstan, also warned that the Russian people would lose their property as well as other aspects of their lives.

For Russia, as well as the world, this spells disaster. A return to communism for a superpower is a step backward. It is, however, a step that is and was foreseeable.

The Russian economy has had many problems. Shortly after the communists lost a substantial amount of power in the Russian government, the rest of Western society was shown pictures of the Russian people in bread lines. Another frightening reality which came about was the splintering of the U.S.S.R. Individual republics have nuclear weapons, free of any Russian control.

With such internal instability, it is somewhat understandable that certain Russian citizens would desire a return to the stability they had under communist rule. We have a mirror of this in our own society, as seen in a call for the return to "traditional family values," which are seen by some as prosperous for the nation.

There is a great difference, however, in "traditional family values" and communism. If communists return to power, will they attempt to regain control of republics they lost after their fall? It was a triumphant moment in world history when the Berlin Wall fell. It would be a shame to see such a monument to tyranny rise in another part of the world.

Additionally, we have seen Russia struggle to deal with rebels in Chechnya. Financially and socially speaking, further military campaigns could be devastating as more Russian troops are killed.

Internationally, both China and Cuba would benefit should Russia return to communist ideology. Although Cuba is starting to falter as Castro grows older, financial support from Russia would make Cuba a significant factor in foreign policy again. With China's threats against Taiwan regarding its elections, it is apparent that China would also benefit in having a neighbor who shared the same government.

After communism fell, the United States became the leading superpower in the world. The Cold War was pronounced as through by our leadership, and democracy was held as a shining example to the world.

We committed a great fallacy when we proclaimed the end of the Cold War. It might have been over for us, but it was not over for the communists in Russia. It appears that those very people, should they come to power, illustrate that one of the scariest periods in U.S. and world history is indeed alive and well.

Qualified admissions shuts out those who most need an education

The recent passage of requirements for admission to Kansas Board of Regents schools brought cheers from proponents and groans from opponents. And most of them for the wrong reasons.

Kansas was the last state in the United States to maintain an open admissions policy. The recent move to place restrictions on where a student is allowed to attend college was met with excitement by many as a sign that something is being done to fix the educational system. Yeah, right.

"OK (insert name here). You aren't qualified to attend, so we are going to help you out and not let you try to improve your education."

Now don't get me wrong. I'm not suggesting that allowing underachievers to attend K-State is going to give them an academic education. Quite the contrary. Allowing them to attend K-State is going to give them a chance to work toward an education.

The legislation passed because of its appeal to those upset by the ill-preparedness of some high school graduates. In fact, my initial response was one of relief. There are students graduating from high schools who don't know how to add, subtract or write in complete sentences.

Proponents like to ask why these students should be allowed to attend a regents school in Kansas. But I think they ask the wrong question. What they should ask is, "How and why are these students earning high school diplomas?"

Unfortunately, people don't, and instead of addressing this issue, they tip-toe around it and pretend that qualified admissions is the magical solution.

People often point to polls showing teacher support for the legislation as evidence it will work. Hey, it's no surprise many teachers favor qualified admissions. Can you imagine trying to teach a college-level course to a yahoo with a third-grade reading comprehension? Teachers support qualified admission because it is the only option they have been offered, not because it solves the problem.

My concern is students who could potentially succeed, despite their past academic performances, are denied the right to a continuing education. Universities can look at a student's academic records and predict likelihood to succeed, but they cannot absolutely predict how the students will perform in college.

There are instances in which poor students blossomed in college, just as there are cases where bright people fell apart.

The grass-roots support for qualified admissions comes from those who are frustrated by the poor performances and failure rates reported by colleges and universities. They want a change that will improve the quality of our education.

We all want that, but this legislation won't accomplish it. The only difference will be a superficial improvement of student success statistics. Supporters will claim a success that will only exist on paper. Administrators will flaunt higher success rates as proof the system has improved. The losers? The students. Our rights to receive an education will be limited. It all adds up to a significant change in policy with no significant gains for our education.

Now if you are like I am, this took a while to sink in. When I heard students would have to meet specific requirements, I figured it was about time something was done to regulate the type of students who enter. But the more I pondered, the more I realized we have nothing to gain and everything to lose.

Suppose a high school graduate who just scraped by decides to attend college. Two things could happen. That person could flunk out or shape up and earn a degree. What is so bad about either?

Sure, we hate to see people fail, but that does not mean the university is to blame. Not everyone is cut out for college. Does that mean those people should be denied the chance to experience college? And what about those who succeed? The education they work for and earn will be of value to them for the rest of their lives.

Will a government mandate make students more successful? I think not. This legislation sounds good in principle and plays to our hopes for a better system. But students of all abilities will continue to attend universities. Those who aren't serious about school make the choice to waste their time, effort and money and lose the chance for an education.

If nothing else, maybe they will learn a lesson that things aren't given to people on a silver platter.

Health insurance a necessary expense

I am graduating in May. At least I hope I am.

Graduation is one of those things you are not quite sure is good for you. Yes, it is about time I get that nice piece of paper that says I am done. After all, I have been here for five years.

And I will be here one more — I will be taking graduate courses part time while writing my butt off for pretty much anyone who will pay me.

"Why," my friend Sarah asked. "Worried about paying rent?" "No," I replied. "I'm not going to live without health insurance."

Sarah was taken aback. "I've never had health insurance," she said.

Exactly.

For the last five years, I have been one of the lucky ones. My parents, while not wealthy, do well enough to keep my sisters and me on the family health insurance policy.

The combination of graduation and the approach of my 23rd birthday (May 20 for those of you compelled to send gifts of food, cash, furniture or major appliances) means I am about to venture into the world of independence.

I will pay my own rent and buy my own food (things I have not had to do as a resident assistant in the residence halls). I will continue the eternal quest for clean laundry.

And I will buy health insurance.

For a while I thought I would just do without. As long as I stay enrolled, I have Lafene Health Center, and that will probably take care of most of my health ills. Most of my Lafene visits are basketball injuries anyway, and barring a broken bone, heart irregularity or something else, I should be able to handle the bills there.

I was telling my friend, Kena, this when she reminded me of her appendix — rather, her lack of an appendix. She had it taken out a couple years ago.

"My parents called the second day I was in the hospital and told me not to worry about the bill," she said. "It was over $4,000."

"I've never had health insurance since I came to school — I never even thought about getting it. And my parents have never done anything like that before. I don't know what I would have done if they hadn't paid it."

I still have my appendix. That means I still have a $4,000 mass of inert flesh in my abdomen just waiting to bill me.

I wear my seat belt, I rarely exceed the speed limit, and I never drink and drive. That does not mean I will never be in an accident. I cannot afford to pay for significant damage to my body, especially on a Collegian salary. But most people do. A recent study found more than 34 million Americans are without health insurance. Most of them are young or elderly or poor, but a surprising number were from households earning more than $30,000 a year.

They are saving a fair passel of cash now, but an accident or injury could devastate them financially.

That is not going to happen to me. I am going to shell out about $100 per month for contingencies that will probably never come about, but I will be safe.

I will have Lafene for the little things. I will have X-rays paid for (one of the benefits of my insurance plan and a real bonus for someone with ankles and knees as bad as mine), and I will have coverage for the big things.

I will not have as much beer money as my cohorts, and I will probably eat a lot of rice, beans and potatoes. But a bout with pneumonia will not put me in debt either. I guess I am still one of the lucky ones.

► HELMETS WON'T PREVENT ACCIDENTS WITH CARS

Editor,
This is the third time I have heard about an accident involving a car and a motorcycle this year. And this is the third time I have heard things like "a helmet should be required when riding a motorcycle, there should be a law about it" — blah, blah, blah.

Now, I don't think I am smarter than those people, but at least I have been riding for 11 years and know what wearing a helmet is about. I can tell you that I never saw any helmet prevent an accident.

Don't get me wrong on this, I am not against wearing a helmet. The helmet is one of the few protections of the biker and decreases significantly the importance of an accident. In fact, I would probably not write this if I hadn't worn one some day in my life. So people, don't only wear a helmet — also get a jacket, gloves and boots.

No, what I am really pissed off about is hearing people tell me how to behave. I am riding for the feeling of freedom I get and to be part of a group of people who want to live a life instead of being pampered in an incubator. I personally will wear a helmet if I feel the need to — not because some driver decided one day that I had to.

What's next? Bumpers? Air bags? I know I can get killed on my bike. I also know I can get killed by a heart attack in my bed. If I have to choose, I'd rather have some fun while I live. If one day my idea of fun includes riding without a helmet, I will, even if I have to get a fine. I think all riders know the risks they take and accept them.

The three accidents that happened in Manhattan involved a car coming in the opposite direction of the motorcycle. I will let the police decide who caused the accident, but I don't think the bikers will be held responsible.

Due to its size, a motorcycle is harder to see than a car. It also moves faster. Unfortunately, the road is full of egocentric, careless drivers who think hitting a bike is not bad. After all it does not jeopardize their own lives. Those are the ones who want to get a law to decrease their responsibility when hitting a biker. Wake up! You share the road with other people, so be responsible when you drive.

To my fellow riders, be careful. They are all out there to get you. The bikers are a big family and the death of one is a loss for all the others. I hope to meet you somewhere, someday. Meanwhile, take care.

► WEARING HELMET SAVED READER'S LIFE

Editor,
I am writing in regard to the number of motorcycle accidents recently, and would like to share my two bits on helmet use.

I myself had a very bad wreck June 19. Forty-four screws, five plates and a 16-inch rod were needed to repair my mangled body. In addition, about six months of my life were needed to heal. To this day, I am having dental work to fix parts of my jaw and teeth.

Bottom line? I was wearing a helmet. It saved my life.

My body has since been bolted back together, and I have made a complete recovery.

In regard to the past two tragedies we have all read about, I think they are truly unfortunate. I don't want to assign blame or speculate on what could have happened. This is certainly not my place to do that.

What I can say is this: My helmet saved me. They have and will save many others. However, they can do no good if they are tucked away under a cargo net or locked to the side of the bike.

I would also like to add that I do not support helmet laws. I don't think we need our government deciding our fate for us. But I do think people would be foolish not to give themselves any advantage possible to survive the collision they will someday certainly have.

Remember, you are invisible, not invincible.

► WHY DID ATHLETE PLAY AFTER ASSAULTING STUDENT?

Editor,
When I saw the KSNW-TV news segment on David Damon Thursday night I was appalled K-State would recruit someone like that to play football, let alone attend classes here.

The Collegian editorial noted Friday that everyone deserves a second chance. I agree. However, Damon was given seven chances before coming to K-State. This man had been arrested seven times and convicted twice! Come on — how many times does it take for someone to learn a lesson? Apparently, some people never learn. After all, he was then suspended from the team for allegedly failing a drug test.

Now we find out, two years later, that he was convicted of sexual battery against another student here. Why weren't the other students informed of this? Why is it that the safety of the women of K-State and Manhattan was not a consideration when it came to allowing Damon to continue to attend classes and play football? Why did he not serve his six-month jail sentence?

K-State has a sexual violence policy which states, "No form of sexual violence will be tolerated or condoned at Kansas State University. This policy prohibits not only those acts commonly understood to constitute 'sexual assault,' but all attempts to coerce sexual activity as well. This University will investigate acts of sexual violence ... and will respond with appropriate action, which may include suspension or dismissal." (p. 26, 1994-1996 Undergraduate Catalog.)

Is the purpose of higher education to turn a convicted drug dealer and sexual offender into "a productive citizen"? I thought that's what prisons were for.

I have always been a supporter of K-State football. Even when the Cats lost every game not many years ago, I was there. I have admired Coach Bill Snyder for turning our football team into a winning organization we could be proud of. However, I would rather have a losing team than a winning one that has a bunch of losers playing for it.

Let me ask you this Coach Snyder: If Damon had assaulted your daughter would he still have been allowed to play football?

► SNYDER NOT GOD; DON'T LET DAMON BACK ON TEAM

Editor,
I am writing this letter in response to the two letters written by Kirk Engle and Matt Kretsinger, in regard to the incident involving football player David Damon.

I always believe it is important to give people a second chance when they have done wrong. But as is evident with the case of Damon, it appears as if he has received more than his share of second chances.

We all have to remember there is an innocent person who is suffering because a football player took it upon himself to assault her. He made more than his share of mistakes before arriving at K-State, and that is all fine and dandy.

Yet, when he took advantage of a fellow student he stepped across the line.

If you look at his past record, in addition to what he has done while at K-State, there is obviously a gruesome trend developing. Each time Damon got into trouble, he was simply slapped on the wrist. I ask Coach Bill Snyder to realize this and not just slap Damon on the wrist and allow him back on the team.

Contrary to popular opinion, Snyder is not God. I love K-State football like the next person, and I am at Wagner Field every Saturday there is a home game. But I cannot support a team that would knowingly allow a known criminal on its team.

From published reports, it seems as if Snyder backs David Damon 100 percent and will allow him on the team. To those people who say Snyder is the most moral man in America, I ask you one thing: Where are your morals? As a proud student of K-

State, I find it repulsive we would allow such a figure to represent our fine institution.

Football is my favorite sport, but I find it more and more difficult to support a team that allows dog beaters, drug abusers and sexual assaulters on its team. I don't want to do it, but I believe that if Damon is allowed back on to the team I will not be able to attend K-State football games.

As students, we need to wake up and realize there is a problematic situation. If enough students rise up and stop supporting the football program, maybe Snyder will realize he made a wrong judgment, and the students don't support him.

Everyone, as well as myself, is ecstatic that Snyder has turned our once-pitiful program into the No. 7 team in the nation.

I would also love to see him bring a national title to K-State, but if the team consists of known criminals, I will not be excited and will not support the team at all.

What we all have to remember is that no matter how much we love football, it is just a game.

What Damon did to our fellow student will be with her for the rest of her life. When all is said and done, our record will only be another statistic no one will care about 50 years down the road.

I ask Snyder one thing: If you really care about K-State and want to do us proud, please do not allow Damon back onto the team. He is a problem waiting to happen, and he needs help.

If he is allowed back onto the team I believe that nothing will be solved, and he will find another woman to take advantage of.

As a student of K-State and a friend of Amy Schulz, I hope this does not happen because the safety of our campus is held in the balance.

► MARS A GREAT IDEA; MARCH COULD HAVE BEEN BETTER

Editor,
When I first heard of MARS (Men

Awareness Rape Society) and the Take Back the Pride walk, I was excited. I eagerly joined the other walkers Thursday night and proceeded to the free-speech zone to listen to the speakers.

I was glad to hear Mark Hurst address the fact that men are socialized to be aggressive and dominant and this socialization can lead to rape attitudes and behaviors. It was great to hear him say rape hurts men, too — in the fact that women must, for their own protection, assume a man to be a rapist and thereby treat him as such — even if that man has done nothing to indicate that he would take such an action.

I was thrilled to hear both Hurst and Paul English address the need men have to be aware of rape-promoting attitudes and behaviors in themselves and others, and men must work to change these attitudes and behaviors.

One of the best remarks of the night was when English said it is far better to speak out against rape behaviors and attitudes that one may see in friends than to remain silent about the issue, even though this is an uncomfortable issue for many.

But I must say, there were some disappointing moments.

First of all, English said something to the effect of, "We need to have women supporting these men. It doesn't matter if we men are all-fired up about rape awareness if the women aren't there to support us." To me, this sounds as if the men of MARS are expecting, or perhaps even demanding, that women acknowledge and praise the work that they are doing. (I'm sure he didn't mean for his words to come across this way, but they did.)

Rape awareness is not an issue that men go above and beyond the call of duty to address — rape awareness is the call of duty for men. It is not women whose behaviors cause rape, it is the behaviors of men. Because some men have these behaviors, and because women cannot distinguish between the "good" men and the "bad" men, women must treat them all as if they are "bad" men until proven otherwise.

Rape hurts men, too. The idea that men are viewed as rapists until they can prove otherwise should make men angry enough to work against rape behaviors, regardless of whether their work is acknowledged and praised by women.

The other issue not addressed was the definition of rape. The assumption was made that everyone who attended the rally knew what rape, rape attitudes and rape behaviors were. This assumption cannot be made.

In a survey of college men, one question was "If you could get away with it, would you rape a woman?" Fifteen to 27 percent answered yes. The same question was asked, using different words. The question read, "If you could get away with it, would you force a woman to have sex with you against her will?" This time, up to 60 percent of the men answered yes. Forty percent of the men taking the survey did not realize that forcing a woman to have sex against her will was rape.

Now then, how can I know the men who participated in the walk are against rape if I cannot know these men understand what rape is?

I do not want MARS to view this as an attack. I would like the men of MARS to view this as a challenge. I want everyone who attended the rally to look upon their participation with pride and think, "We did some great things Thursday night. We brought an issue into the public eye that is normally shoved under the rug. We did make a couple of mistakes, but next time, we'll know what to do to have an even bigger and better rally."

I ask each and every one of you who is reading this to be aware of rape, and to attend the rally which is apparently being planned for next year.

Rape affects every one of us, whether we are male or female. We as humans are responsible to work against rape behaviors and to promote rape awareness. It is a duty in which we can take pride, but it is our duty nonetheless.

■ Snyder finds ways to improve upon talent in Wildcats' secondary

Shana Newell
sports editor

It was considered the best in the nation last year by many accounts.

Three starters return to K-State's secondary, including first-team all-American Chris Canty, honorable-mention Joe Gordon and Holiday Bowl MVP Mario Smith.

"You can't help but like the returning guys in the secondary. Mario Smith, Chris Canty and Joe Gordon are all three very talented, enthusiastic and knowledgeable players," football coach Bill Snyder said.

But the talent and knowledge does not end in the corners.

At free safety, the strength of the position comes in the body of senior Mario Smith and junior Monty Spiller, who is replacing Chuck Marlowe at strong safety. Smith compiled eight tackles for the whites during the spring game, six of which were unassisted. He also intercepted one of backup quarterback Cody Lee Smith's passes.

In the defensive back slots, as in all of Snyder's realms, the depth does not end at the first team.

If the spring game is any indication, Snyder has only improved upon the secondary with senior Clyde Johnson and junior Demetric Denmark.

With the addition of Bob Cope as defensive coordinator, Johnson found himself adjusting to the strong safety position after a move from backup cornerback.

"Physically he's more in tune to being a safety than a corner," Cope said. "He's a big strong guy, but he does a good job in coverage when he's out there."

Against the purples, Johnson had 12 tackles, seven of which were unassisted.

Denmark will be expected to do a good job in coverage, and his speed will be the key, Snyder said.

"I think this is going to be a watermark year for Demetric. He's an exciting young guy, and he's learning his way as a defensive back. He runs awfully well, and he's got excellent speed," Snyder said.

Denmark tallied four unassisted tackles in the spring game.

Sophomore David Conley and redshirt freshman Lamar Chapman will back up the safety holes. K-State fans were able to experience the range of possibilities Snyder can use in the defensive back positions, as every player listed on the two-deep roster was given a chance to prove himself.

In what appears to be a permanent move, Canty will be splitting time on both sides of the ball. Snyder said they will not allow Canty's time on the offensive end to interfere with his performance on the defensive side of the ball.

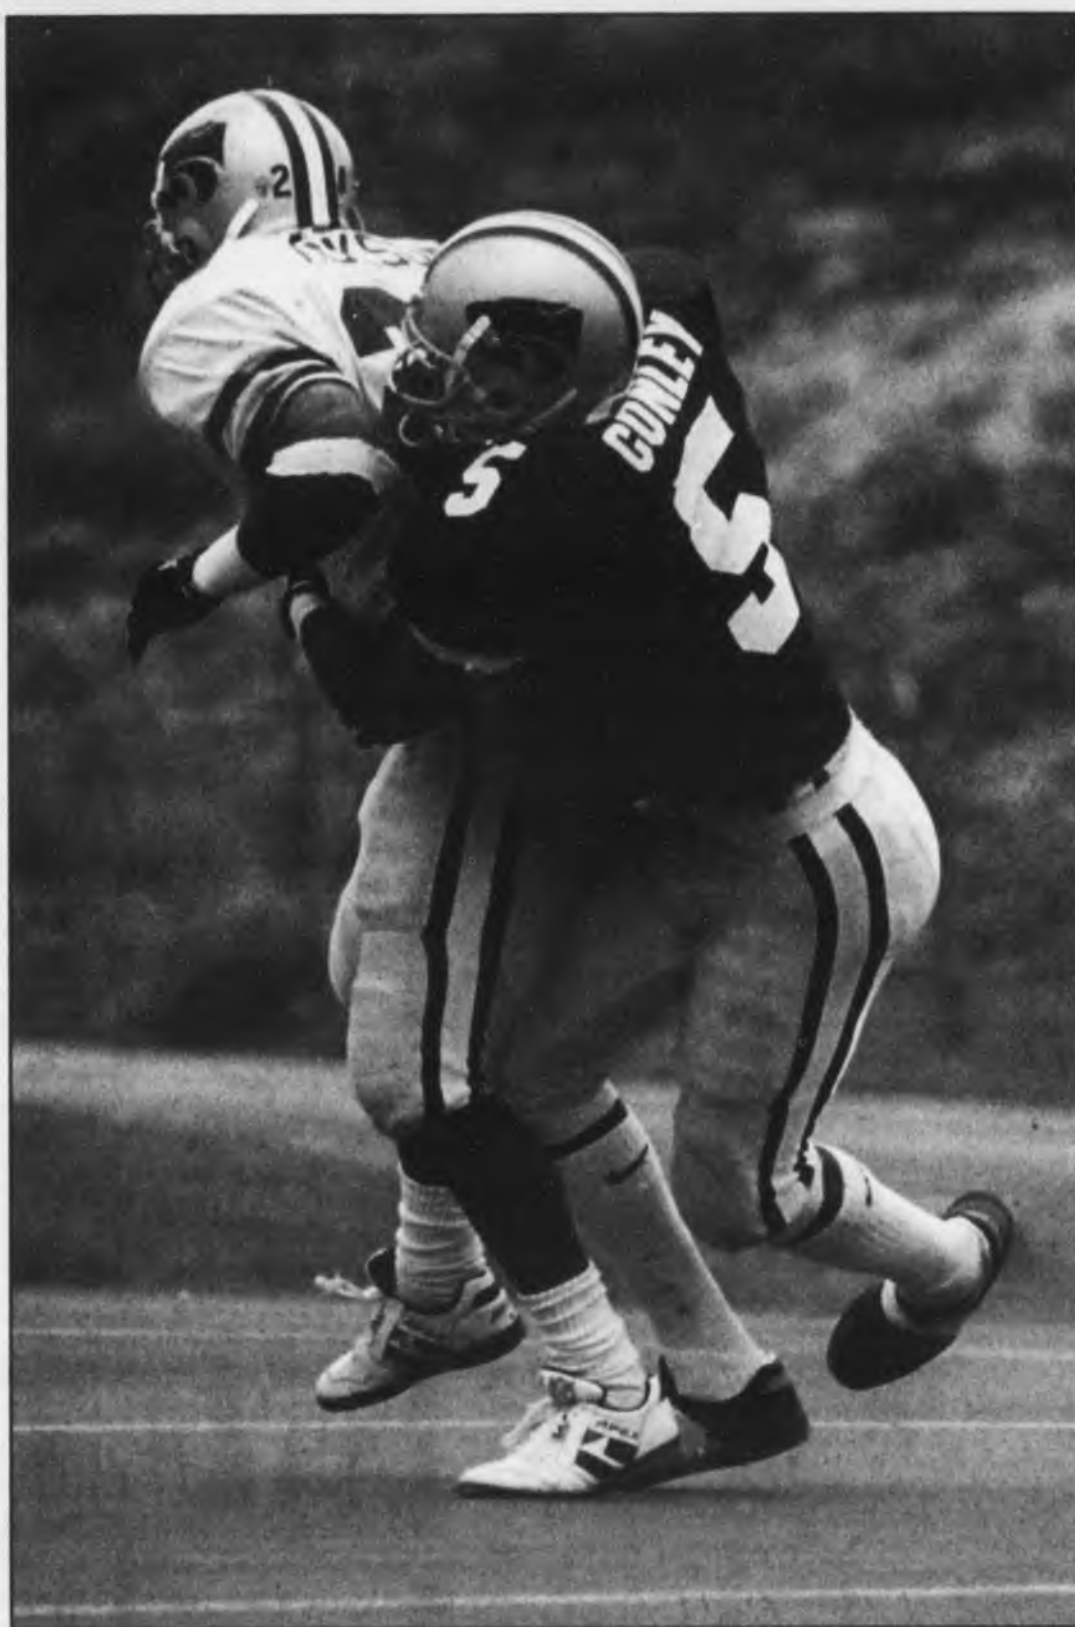

Canty said he will do whatever is necessary.

"If coach needs me, I'll step out there and play. If he needs me two plays, I'll play two plays. If he needs me 10 plays, I'll play 10 plays. It's kind of a joint kind of thing," Canty said.

Defensively, cornerback Canty had three unassisted tackles for the Cats and one assisted tackle and one pass broken up.

At the other corner, Gordon saw limited playing time for the whites, but contributed enough to tally an unassisted tackle.

Backup safeties Conley and Spiller had big games for the purples as they competed hard for attention — a competition Conley won among the fans.

With 13 tackles, 11 of them unassisted, Conley led the secondary in tackles.

He also intercepted one of No. 1 quarterback Brian Kavanagh's passes.

Spiller also tallied four un-sisted tackles for the purple squad.

Defensive back Chapman made a statement as he downed runners 10 times, seven of which he did without help.

With the defensive line still a question in the minds of K-State coaches and fans, the defensive backs will be depended upon to stop the opponent's long charges.

With a strong returning staff and the movement of backups into more positive roles, the strength of the squads should not hinder K-State's chances at another bowl appearance.

Kavanagh prepared to take over

Trevor Grimm
staff writer

Saturday's spring football game was just another stop on the road to respect for K-State quarterback Brian Kavanagh.

After all, despite leading K-State to an easy win in last year's Holiday Bowl, many Wildcat fans have wondered who will assume the quarterback helm after the Chad May and Matt Miller eras.

Kavanagh's performance Saturday should reassure those fans.

En route to a 49-6 win for his white team, the 6-foot-3 senior passed for 453 yards and five touchdowns while completing 80 percent of his passes (28 for 35).

Included in that performance was a second half that saw Kavanagh complete 15 of 17 passes. The two incompletions were intercepted, however, a point that Kavanagh said bothered him.

"If I had to grade myself, I don't know. Maybe a B, B-minus, except for the two interceptions," Kavanagh said. "We can't turn the ball over. If we turn the ball over, we're going to hurt our offense. Aside from the two picks, I'm happy with how I played."

The setup of the spring game might have contributed to Kavanagh's strong performance.

"Depending on what formation we were in, they could play one defense," Kavanagh said. "The defense couldn't disguise, couldn't blitz anything. It was really just kind of like a high school game out there."

And a switch on the scoreboard contributed to the white team's passing-based attack in the second half. After the first half saw Kavanagh lead the white team to a 28-3 halftime lead, the second half saw him try to bring the white team back after Coach Bill Snyder reversed the scores at halftime.

"I went to the locker room up 28-3 and came out down 28-3," Kavanagh said. "Coach wanted to see if we could come back."

And they almost did. Kavanagh threw for three touchdowns in a 4:24 span in the fourth quarter before the game effectively ended with a late interception. Two of the receptions were courtesy of Andre Anderson, the second of which completed a 55-yard play.

"(Jimmy Dean and Anderson) are the people I threw the ball to last year," Kavanagh said. "I have all the confidence in the world in those guys, and Brian Jackson also. Kevin (Lockett) didn't play a whole lot today, and those three were my main targets."

Based on Saturday's performance, Kavanagh could get many chances to throw to those targets this season.

If I had to grade myself, I don't know. Maybe a B, B-minus, except for the two interceptions.

MHS athlete to see repeat action in state Shrine Bowl

Trevor Grimm
staff writer

A K-State-bound athlete from Manhattan High School is headed for the Kansas Shrine Bowl for the second consecutive year.

Jason Kazar, a senior linebacker at Manhattan High, officially accepted a spot in the Aug. 3 game Tuesday. Kazar plans to play for the Wildcats this fall as a walk-on.

Kazar follows former and future teammate Jason Hogaboom, who graduated from Manhattan High last year and red-shirted for the Cats last season.

Kazar said he is looking forward to the Shrine Bowl and the trip to St. Louis one week before the game, when players, coaches, trainers and team managers are flown there to visit the Shriner's Hospital.

"I'm looking forward to going to St.

Louis and seeing those kids in the hospital," Kazar said.

"I think it will get our spirits up and get us to play hard."

Although Manhattan High did not keep defensive statistics last year, Kazar estimated he had six or seven sacks and returned a blocked punt for a touchdown against Salina South.

Kazar's success led him to believe he had a chance to go to the Shrine Bowl, he said.

"I had some smaller goals at the beginning of the year, but as I progressed through the year, I had the goal of playing in the Shrine Bowl," Kazar said.

His success last season also turned some heads in his own backyard of K-State.

Kazar said he considered playing at Washburn, Emporia State and Pittsburg State before the Wildcats expressed an interest.

"K-State's got a real good program," Kazar said.

"I went to their games, and I like the way things are done."

Kazar said he has heard from K-State coach Bill Snyder and linebackers coach Brent Venables since receiving the nomination.

"I talked to Coach Venables and Coach Snyder, and they were really happy for me," Kazar said.

The Shrine Bowl will be 2 p.m. Aug. 3 at Moore Bowl on the Washburn University campus. Sixty-eight high school football players were selected by Kansas sportswriters to play in the game.

End of year ponderings

With the end of the semester, I find myself realizing this time of the year always brings about certain changes.

First, one can coincide the end of the semester with the end of the basketball and hockey seasons. Second, one can link the beginning of the summer with the heyday of baseball and the preparations of football — and a little more.

Action in betting for the Kentucky Derby seems to be taking up. It appears an injury to Derby favorite Unbridled's Song has some people picking Skip Away — the winner of last week's Blue Grass Stakes. But I think it would be hard for a horse to run like Skip Away did in the Blue Grass race and follow it up with a second career race.

If Unbridled's Song does not heal before the Derby, look for Editor's Note and Prince of Thieves to surprise some betters.

Speaking of betting — who would have bet the Montreal Expos would be leading the National League East at the close of April?

But, lo and behold — they are. Not only do they lead the East with wins, but they lead the NL in batting average, runs scored, home runs, RBIs and slugging percentage. All this with the lowest payroll in the major leagues. Its roster consists of young players whose combined salaries are slightly higher than Cecil Fielder's yearly paycheck.

Whoever said a low payroll does not pay off? At the other end of the spectrum are the Cincinnati Reds. The last time the folks in Cincy started a season off this bad, their manager was fired after 44 games.

In its worst start since 1993, Ray Knight's team has lost seven consecutive games. But do not look for Knight to join the welfare line. Knight has a two-year contract with the Reds. Marge Schott has never fired a manager with a full year left on a contract — and I doubt the money-hungry empress starts now. Why would she want to wind up paying two managers' salaries for more than a year? Then again, we're talking about the lady who really thought her dog was a good luck charm.

A good luck charm might be exactly what the Chicago Bulls need entering the playoffs with mouthy Dennis Rodman on the squad. Maybe Phil Jackson is starting to understand what San Antonio coach Bob Hill went through last year when Rodman's bizarre actions contributed to the Spurs' postseason failure.

What about UMASS' Marcus Camby and high school sensation Kobe Bryant? I guess money means more than an education to some people. My thought is this: When will the NBA learn Dennis Rodman's are created by immaturity? Perhaps encouraging kids to finish school instead of leaving early might help the clubs avoid the trouble players like Rodman bring.

Speaking of staying in school, Dallas Cowboys' star Emmitt Smith has made my top 10 Athletes Ever list. Six years ago he made his mother a promise. He keeps that promise Saturday when he graduates from the University of Florida.

Smith will earn a bachelor of science degree in public relations after returning to Gainesville every offseason to finish his degree. Way to go, Emmitt. That degree is worth way more than three Super Bowl rings.

Has Rick Neuheisel gone crazy? He has said he wants Colorado's football team to perform like last season's national champs — the Kentucky Wildcats. That's right, folks. Neuheisel said he wants the Buffaloes to be faster and more upbeat. Their defensive coordinator has said they are going to play man-to-man, full-court press. Either K-State's in serious trouble, or we have nothing to worry about. I don't know, Coach Snyder — maybe you should be checking some basketball strategy books out of the library.

On another money-hungry note — Monica Seles has decided to sue the organizers of the Citizens Cup tournament for $16 million. If you do not remember, Seles was attacked at court-side and did not play again until last summer. Now she wants the organizers to pay for lost earnings.

I think this is plain bull. Seles waited until the day before the three-year statute of limitations expired. Not only that — it is really the fault of the organizers that a crazed lunatic managed to get on the court? There is something to be said for wanting retribution — but why wait three years?

Look at what the future brings — inline hockey as an Olympic sport. Actually, I have not figured this one out yet so I will have to get back with you.

► PLAYBOY SELECTS CANTY

K-State cornerback Chris Canty has been selected to Playboy's 1996 Preseason All-America team and will travel to Phoenix, May 10-12, for the all-America weekend.

Canty was a first-team consensus all-American as a sophomore in 1995 and was a finalist for the Bronko Nagurski National Defensive Player of the Year Award and the Jim Thorpe Award. He tied for the national lead with eight interceptions last year, including two that he returned for touchdowns.

Cats, Cyclones to clash for position

Shana Newell
sports editor

Keep the wins coming — that should be the motto for the K-State baseball team as it travels to Ames, Iowa, today to take on the Cyclones in a doubleheader.

Carrying an 11-11 conference record and a fourth-place ranking, the Cats have guaranteed themselves a berth in the Big 8 Tournament.

With league standings still in the air, K-State has the ability to finish the season in second place.

Missouri has clinched first place in the league with 17-5 Big 8 and 34-12 overall records. Oklahoma State and Oklahoma round out the top three in the conference but are struggling of late. The Cowboys have a 14-9 Big 8 record and are 29-18 overall. The Sooners are only a game ahead of the Cats with a 12-10 Big 8 record and 27-21 overall.

The contest between the Cats and the Cyclones should pan out as a fighter, as K-State is not the only team with something to gain from winning these two games.

With seven conference games yet to play, the 'Clones, 7-12 and 16-26, still have to face Missouri in a two-game series and last-place Nebraska in a three-game bout. Nebraska, at 7-15 in league games and 20-25-1, is battling to earn a trip to the tournament.

And what about Kansas? After losing four out of five games to the Cats, the Jayhawks are through with their conference schedule.

The outcomes of Iowa State's and Nebraska's final series' will determine the Hawks' fate.

KYLE WYATT/Collegian

K-State's Heath Schesser successfully steals second against a KU shortstop during the middle innings of the Wildcats' 4-3, 10-inning victory Friday night at Frank Myers Field.

K-State will send right-hander Eric Yanz in the first game of the doubleheader. Yanz is 4-5 on the year and has a 4.97 ERA.

In his last start, a 4-3 victory against Kansas, Yanz went 8.1 innings to earn the win.

Expected to start game two of the doubleheader will be either freshman Mickey Blount or staff ace Matt Koeman.

Blount earned his first win of the season in only his first start — an 11-3 win in Lawrence last week. His ERA is at 4.15.

Koeman is 7-3 on the season with a 4.29 ERA. His last win also came last week at the expense of the Hawks — a 14-9 victory.

In the series in Manhattan earlier this season, the Cats and the 'Clones split the series.

The 7-6 loss to Iowa State was only K-State's ninth loss of the season.

Because of a rained out game in Manhattan, the K-State vs. Iowa State series will only consist of four games.

The Cats return to Frank Myers Field for a two-game series with Oral Roberts University next Tuesday and Wednesday.

► CREW

Weather disrupted team's year

John Berggren
staff writer

The K-State crew teams wrapped up their season Saturday and Sunday on an odd note — the weather was nice.

The men's varsity four led all K-State teams with a third-place finish in the first heat of the race and a ninth-place finish overall.

The men's novice four finished fourth in its first heat and 10th overall. The men's novice eight finished fourth in its first heat and 11th overall.

The women's novice eight and women's novice four both failed to qualify past the first heat.

K-State crew coach Al Koch said the season did not end as most would like.

"The kids worked extremely hard," Koch said. "The weather this spring was as bad as I've ever experienced out on Tuttle. I think the weather conditions are a prime reason why we didn't do quite the way we hoped."

"I think the lack of time out on the water hurt our conditioning. We would do well the first half of our races, but we couldn't finish them."

Koch also cited a disappointment from the season that was beyond anyone's control.

"I think the injury to our women's novice captain, Kim Desch, toward the end of the season," Koch said. "Having her train all spring working up to the final meet of the year, and then her not being able to row because of a herniated disk in her back, probably hurt the women's team."

The crew team lost 13 rowers last year, and this year the team looks to graduate only one. This year was looked upon as a rebuilding year.

"Last year we lost almost all of our team," Koch said. "Next year we will have pretty high expectations, especially on the men's side, with how well the novice crews did for us this year."

New coach wants winning attitude

Dan Lewerenz
contributing writer

With all the hype surrounding the hiring of a coach, it is hard for most people to realize the hiring is only the first step.

Newly hired K-State women's basketball coach Debbie Patterson knows it, though — and she is just getting started.

"Obviously if we're going to hire a staff of quality people, it takes a commitment by the University," Patterson said.

In fact, K-State's commitment to excellence behind the scenes helped bring Patterson to Manhattan in the first place.

"I was especially impressed by the excitement, the enthusiasm and the commitment of the administration toward building the program into a national competitor. There was sincerity in that," she said.

"I also felt a real commitment toward all aspects of what it takes to make a program successful. Sometimes you run into jobs where there's a great deal of talent in the program, but coaches have made it work in spite of the institution. I really felt a commitment here, and the move to the Big 12 sealed it."

With the future in mind, recruiting is obviously a focus. But while Patterson admits the Wildcats lack size compared to most of their opponents, she is not rushing out to sign stars for next year.

"This summer is all about the November signing class, juniors in high school," she said. "We do have a scholarship available, but it's late to get a player that fits the specific needs of this program at this time. There are quality players out there, but at this time I don't see us directing our efforts that way."

Patterson said she had spoken with all three recruits K-State signed in the November signing period, and they are still excited about playing for the Cats.

Once the personnel issue is nailed down, coaches and players will focus on the season and Patterson's goal for next year — a trip to the NCAA tournament.

"We haven't achieved that goal since 1987," Patterson said of the Big Dance. "To reach a point where you become one of the top 64 teams in the nation is an enormous accomplishment in today's game. I prefer to direct our program toward that goal."

To get to that point, Patterson said she hopes to create a mind set where the team expects to win, no matter who they play.

"You throw it up and compete — somebody's going to win and somebody's going to lose."

"We'll never lose because we think we're going to lose. I don't care who we're playing, we're going to play every game to win. I'm not afraid of the letters on someone's jersey."

NU receiver's defense needs more evidence

Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — A lawyer for Nebraska receiver Riley Washington said Tuesday police are having a hard time finding a witness to a shooting for which Washington faces an attempted murder charge.

Defense attorney Kristi Egger said she needs sworn statements from Nathan Miles and Anthony Jackson to support objections to evidence prosecutors want to use against Washington. She said the men were witnesses to the Aug. 2 incident.

She asked Lancaster County District Court Judge Bernard McGinn to delay a hearing in Washington's case to give police time to find Miles and the defense time to question Miles and Jackson. The judge delayed the hearing until May 21 but said he would like to get the matter to trial in the July jury term.

Washington, a junior from Chula Vista, Calif., has pleaded innocent to charges of attempted second-degree murder and using a gun to commit a felony. He is accused of shooting 22-year-old Jermaine Cole of Lincoln outside a convenience store.

The defense has objected to statements made by witnesses and the way in which witnesses selected photos of Washington from police files.

The defense has argued that the mug shots assembled by police and used by witnesses who identified Washington were improper. Egger said the men in the photos ranged from ages 22-41, with Washington the youngest. Washington's picture was also the only photograph that appeared in two sets of pictures.

Deputy County Attorney David Stempson has said the two sets of pictures were assembled according to standard police procedures. Several police officers have testified that witnesses who identified Washington's photograph did so within seconds of viewing either set of pictures.

Washington surrendered to police shortly after the shooting. He was jailed for 13 days before posting a $10,000 bond. He was reinstated on the team and played briefly in the Fiesta Bowl in January when Nebraska won a second-consecutive national title.

Defense attorneys have questioned the credibility of the witnesses against Washington. Cole was sentenced in February to 10 months in jail for assaulting a former girlfriend.

Another witness, Harold Stewart, has testified that he was standing close to Cole when the shooting occurred but that he could not identify Washington as the gunman. Stewart was sentenced in February to six to eight years in prison on a drug charge.

New bill will require testing for AIDS virus

Associated Press

HARRISBURG, Pa. — Boxers must be tested for the AIDS virus 30 days before an event, under a bill the Pennsylvania House passed unanimously Tuesday.

This would add to the law requiring boxers to undergo a pre-fight medical examination. Fighters who refuse the test would be prohibited from boxing. Results would be kept confidential.

The bill has been sent to the state senate, where similar legislation is under consideration.

After heavyweight fighter Tommy Morrison tested positive for the virus, some states have responded with regulations.

The fight Morrison had been preparing for was canceled after the test results were revealed, and he was suspended from worldwide boxing.

A boxer could still get the virus within the 30-day period, but Rep. John Lawless, R-Montgomery, said testing would minimize the chances of one boxer infecting another in the ring.

Actual risk of transmitting HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, during a match is low, state Secretary of Health Daniel Hoffman said.

He said this is based on the fact that HIV infection rates among health care workers dealing with blood-borne exposures during patient care is extremely low.

The state licenses 400 to 600 fighters each year.

The commission took no position on the 30-day requirement, but issued its own regulation Monday.

Boxers must test once a year as a condition to getting their license, Sirb said.

Boxing commissions in seven states and Puerto Rico already had required annual tests before Morrison's revelation.

Massachusetts' commission mandated testing two months ago. New York is expected to do the same shortly.

Steve Acunto of the American Association for the Improvement of Boxing in Mount Vernon, N.Y., welcomed Pennsylvania's legislation but said testing should be done the morning of a match.

Owners vote to move Oilers to Nashville

Associated Press

ATLANTA — NFL owners voted Tuesday to allow the Houston Oilers to move to Nashville, Tenn.

"It passed," said Alex Spanos, owner of the San Diego Chargers, emerging from a 4-1/2-hour meeting. "Houston is moving to Tennessee."

Still uncertain was when the team will actually move to the Tennessee capital. The Oilers have a lease with the Astrodome through 1997.

Also, the deal is contingent on Nashville residents approving a May 7 referendum on the $292 million deal. Polls suggest overwhelming support for plans to bring the state its first major-league franchise.

The Oilers would be the seventh NFL team to switch cities since 1982 — and the fourth in the past year.

Unlike the impassioned effort to keep the Browns from moving from Cleveland to Baltimore, a "Save The Oilers" campaign failed to generate much interest. The team has played to thousands of empty seats in recent seasons, and a rally earlier this year attracted less than 50 people.

"I'd hardly call that an emotional outpouring," New York Giants co-owner Robert Tisch said.

In a memo to the 30 NFL teams, commissioner Paul Tagliabue said the Oilers met all nine of the criteria that govern relocation.

Oilers owner Bud Adams was rebuffed in his efforts to build a stadium to replace the 31-year-old Astrodome.

Still, the owners were reluctant to leave one of the nation's largest television markets.

"You always have concerns about moving from a market the size of Houston to one the size of Nashville," said Pat Bowlen, owner of the Denver Broncos. "But Nashville has done a good job and deserves a team."

The move is contingent on the May 7 referendum in Nashville, where voters are to decide whether to approve $80 million in city bonds needed to complete the package.

"We have one more issue to get over," Nashville Mayor Phil Bredesen said.

"But I think this will supercharge the voters. It clears the decks. There's no more uncertainty."

The Oilers are planning to change their name if they move to Nashville and probably will use Tennessee instead of the city name in an attempt to lure a statewide following.

Americans win 1st medal in 34 years

Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — Minor-league goalie Parris Duffus put on another outstanding performance Tuesday and led the United States to a 3-2 victory over Sweden in the quarterfinals of the World Hockey Championships.

The United States has not won a medal in the tournament in 34 years.

The deciding goal was scored by Chris Tancill of the San Jose Sharks in the second period. New York Islanders teammates Chris Luongo and Dan Plante scored the first two U.S. goals.

But it was Duffus who stole the show. Taking a first-period shot off his forehead that raised a welt and darkened his right eye, Duffus faced 31 shots, many of them right on target as he frustrated the Swedes, last year's runners-up in the championships.

The lightly regarded Americans — heavy with NHL talent, but missing most of their big names like Pat LaFontaine and Mike Modano — won a bronze medal in 1962, but have not won gold since 1960.

The gold in 1960 came in the Olympics, which then also counted as a world championship. Not counting that gold, the last American gold in the worlds came in 1933 — 63 years ago.

"He's probably been the best goalie in this tournament, and I hope everybody realizes this," said U.S. coach Ron Wilson, who also coaches the Anaheim Mighty Ducks.

"There are bigger names — nobody knows who Parris Duffus is. You have Martin Brodeur and Curtis Joseph (with Canada) ... and with the Russians there's (Andrei) Trefilov and (Mikhail) Shtalenkov NHL goalies. And here's this kid from the minors coming in and playing better than everybody."

The 26-year-old Duffus — who has never played a minute in the NHL but is under contract with the Winnipeg Jets — faced pressure throughout the game. The smooth-skating Swedes, a club stocked with six NHL players who lost to Finland in the final last year, were held in check by the Americans' trapping game.

"My eye is good," said Duffus, referring to his budding shiner. "It just rang my bell a little bit. I thought it was cut ... and it dented my mask a little bit."

"Our defense was strong ... they only got the odd second shot on me," added Duffus, who has allowed just 12 goals in five games. "We've been doing a good job of clearing guys out ... If I can see the puck, I like my chances of stopping it most of the time."

Duffus was picked for the U.S. team at the last moment several weeks ago after three NHL goalies said no — Guy Hebert of Anaheim, Damian Rhodes of Ottawa and Chris Terreri of San Jose.

United States will face either Germany or the Czech Republic in the semifinals Friday.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

Task force explores jump in nationwide gas prices

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department opened an investigation Tuesday into the causes of the recent surge in gasoline prices at the pump.

Assistant Attorney General Anne K. Bingaman, head of the department's antitrust division, named a five-person task force of lawyers and economists to conduct the investigation, department spokesman Carl Stern announced.

She acted at the request of Associate Attorney General John Schmidt and in response to inquiries by three members of Congress, Stern said.

Two Senate Democrats from Connecticut, Christopher Dodd and Joseph Lieberman, and Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., wrote Attorney General Janet Reno requesting an investigation.

The task force, whose member were not identified, will first study whether market forces account for the increase in prices, Stern said. "If not, then they will determine whether there is evidence of collusion, which is illegal under antitrust laws."

During past gasoline shortages, the antitrust division has found no basis for taking action against oil companies. In those instances, either market forces were responsible for price increases or the companies raised prices independently, thereby avoiding violations of antitrust laws that prohibit competing businesses from agreeing on price actions.

The Justice investigation is the third move by the Clinton administration in two days to respond to the price surge, which has become an election-year issue.

Republicans have used the price rise to propose repeal of the 4.3-cent a-gallon gasoline tax increase that Clinton won in 1993 as part of a deficit-reduction package.

On Monday, Clinton authorized the orderly sales of about 12 million barrels of oil from the nation's strategic petroleum reserves, a move that, by increasing supplies, might drive down prices.

Gasoline prices are at their highest level since the Persian Gulf War. They've jumped 5 cents in the past two weeks and 14 cents in the past year. The average price nationwide was $1.36 a gallon as of Friday, according to the Lundberg Survey of 10,000 gasoline stations.

But in California, a crucial swing state in the presidential race, unleaded gasoline averaged $1.55 a gallon and, in some areas of the state, full-service premium exceeded $2 a gallon.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, Clinton's GOP presidential rival, and House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said Congress would vote by Memorial Day to roll back the gas tax through the end of the year.

Dole, who proposed the repeal in a letter to Clinton on Friday, said "the most certain way to give consumers relief is to repeal the gas tax."

The White House says it's willing to discuss repeal.

Democratic lawmakers suggested oil-company profiteering had more to do with motorists' pain at the pump than the 4.3-cent-per-gallon surcharge.

"Just before the tourist season begins, it's interesting that these prices would go as high as they are," said Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D. "I have a feeling it has a lot more to do with profits than it does with taxes."

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., in a letter, called on Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary to investigate whether price increases were the result of collusion, price-fixing or deliberate efforts to limit supply by the oil industry.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, cited the depleted oil stockpiles from the unusually cold winter and the new requirement in California for using emissions-reducing reformulated gasoline as reasons for the price increase. He also said the false expectations that Iraq soon would resume exporting oil kept production down.

But Markey said oil companies — whose profits have increased strongly — have curtailed refining rather than increasing it after the severe winter.

Firms request cyclists' input

Bicycle consultants let students and community members do the talking at a public meeting Tuesday in the K-State Student Union.

The consultants, Mark Moore from Landplan engineering and Terri L. Musser from Bicycles &, were hired by the state to develop a master plan for the city and campus and said they were just beginning the project by getting comments from the public.

"We don't have any preconceived notions right now about how we're going to do this," Moore said.

"It's not simple, it's not easy, and this is probably a two- to three-month long process where we'll develop recommendations for different scenarios."

The concern voiced by many of the students and community members was safety, especially around Tuttle Creek Boulevard and the Northview area.

"Coming from the Northview area, I come up the hill on Kimball and down Manhattan Avenue," Bruce Reed, freshman in electrical engineering, said.

"I prefer not to go up that hill. I'd rather go around another way, but it's no better as far as traffic goes, and it's a lot longer."

Reed also said he would go south along Tuttle Creek Boulevard if there were a safe place to cross Tuttle Creek Boulevard so he could access campus.

By a show of hands it was the consensus of the dozen people in attendance they would feel safer if the master plan would include more space on the streets so motorists could pass along side bicyclists on the curb side of the street.

A show of hands also showed those in attendance would prefer the extra space be a 4-5 foot lane marked with a stripe and bicyclist stencil.

"I feel confident riding my bike in traffic, but there's just that one car that seems to be an inch and a half from your handle bars as it's whizzing by you," James Mitchell, senior in bakery science, said.

"It's those instances that make me wish that there was a bike lane designated."

The consultants said designated bike lanes are often difficult due to on-street parking and the need for continued maintenance.

Another topic considered was the need for better access to the core area of campus as well as traveling across campus.

Mitchell said he found it difficult to get from the south end of campus to the north end of campus without going onto city streets or dismounting and walking his bike.

The consultants said they felt this difficulty would be relieved when Mid-Campus Drive was reopened.

Another concern Reed mentioned was the intersection by Seaton and Durland halls near Ahearn Field House.

He said the access was the most direct route through campus if the difficulty at the intersection could be relieved.

Bicycle parking and its safety were also discussed.

David Colburn, manager of a local bicycle shop, said he has repeatedly heard disgruntled customers complain that parking on campus was not convenient and the racks that were provided damaged the paint on their bikes.

He said the newer racks that look like an inverted U provide safety, but the bike gets scratched if someone bumps it while it is leaning against the rack.

Other topics discussed were the need for education at the school age to adult levels as well as distribution of maps giving preferred bicycle routes.

The consultants will continue gathering information today by taking a bicycle tour of the city and campus and begin making recommendations for their plan as well as policy recommendations.

... (T)here's just that one car that seems to be an inch and a half from your handle bars as it's whizzing by you. It's those instances that make me wish that there was a bike lane designated.

my friend at her work and she refused to give him my address."

When Wood received the letter, she assumed her friend had given in to the harassment. After the letter had arrived, Wood's friend informed her Wood's ex-boyfriend had told her not to worry about giving him the information because he found everything he needed on the Internet.

"I had no idea my information was out there," Wood said. "Had I known I would have signed a non-disclosure form to keep my information confidential."

Since the letter, Wood, has also received e-mail from the ex-boyfriend. Wood has taken precautionary measures should anything happen in the future.

"I've made copies of my e-mail and kept the letter," Wood said. "He has tried to choke me, he has tried to abduct me from a public place, and I perceive his contact as threatening."

John Bucher, director of Computing and Network Services, said he was unaware of student concerns.

"We get a download every night that refreshes the information," he said. "Students need to realize it is the same information that is in the student directory."

Bucher said with the current system, students wishing to have their names deleted from the World Wide Web must sign a non-disclosure form.

The non-disclosure form restricts student information. Once the form is signed by a student, the University cannot confirm or deny any student information or their attendance.

"I don't think students should be penalized if they don't want their information on this type of a directory," Meier said. "The non-disclosure takes away benefits."

"It is possible to come up with a mechanism to remove this information every night," Bucher said. "There is a lot to iron out and we can't immediately solve this problem, but we will take steps to deal with it."

Wood isn't the only student unhappy with the Internet access.

Mike Meier, senior in political science, said he doesn't feel comfortable knowing that people have access to his information on the World Wide Web.

"I don't like the fact that anyone has access to my student information," Meier said. "If someone goes to the trouble of calling the Registrar's to find out my phone number or address that is one thing. At least they have an idea of who they are looking for."

CHECKS

Check collection agencies generate lists of delinquent checks to many local businesses, taking away check-writing privileges at those businesses for those who have written bad checks. The Union generates a similar list, but it is only circulated within the Union.

Thoman said he would like to develop criteria that would allow the Union to continue working with the Riley County attorney's office without using the gender and race codes.

He said he hopes information collected from driver's licenses, such as birth date, social security number, height and weight, will be sufficient.

Jennifer Groom, senior in biology and a licensed racing jockey, takes Healing Art, a 3-year-old Thoroughbred filly, through her paces at the Bryce Fowles Training Stables on McDowell Creek Road near Interstate 70.

The RIDE

Jennifer Groom started out grooming horses at the Woodlands; now she races at the Woodlands story by Khristi Shell

A mild hush falls over the crowd.

All heads turn expectantly waiting for the signal that would release them from the fidgeting immobility that has captured them. Murmurs break out in the crowd as the anticipation almost becomes unbearable.

Then it begins. The shrill ring of the bell screams forth as the steel gates snap open.

The crowd is a seething, wild mass as thousands of pounds of horse flesh leap forward like a shot from a catapult. Each one jostles and fights for a position.

The people in the crowd are in a frenzy, cheering their favorite on, hoping against hope to win.

Then it is over, and the crowd begins to disperse. The winners go to collect their winnings, and the losers go to wait for the next race.

This is the exciting world of horse racing where fortunes could be won or lost.

It is also the place where a career could be made — not the career of a seasoned gambler or bookie, but the career of a horse jockey.

Normally, jockeys are found around the race track, but there is one to be found right here at K-State.

Jennifer Groom, junior in biology, has been a jockey for almost a year and has been riding on a part-time basis since she has been in school.

She said she hopes after college, she can take some time out and ride full-time, but she does not want to make it her lifetime career.

She is not riding full-time, because she wants to get her degree first, Groom said.

"If I ever got hurt or did finish school and go out there, and decide I really like it and end up doing it for full time, I don't want to get out of it suddenly and find myself not having any skills for anything," she said.

Groom got involved in the racing world in 1991 when she went to the Woodlands and started working as a groom. She later acquired an exercise rider license but did not do anything with it.

"I thought it would be a fun summer job to go out there and work," she said. "That was a year after the Woodlands opened.

"I thought, well it looks like fun to ride — I want to try to ride. So it took me almost all summer, but I finally convinced the trainer I was working for."

She did not like it at first, she said, but then she started to work for Bryce Fowles Training Center to pay off her horse's board there.

She said she learned more about riding there, and it became more fun.

"The first hour, I thought my arms were going to come out of my sockets," Groom said. "They pulled so hard I was out of breath.

"It doesn't look like hard work, but I couldn't breathe at all when I got off, and that's how it has been for a long time after my first races."

While she was working for Fowles, she was convinced to become a jockey and ride his horses in races. She received her jockey license when she rode for the stewards of Eureka Downs.

The stewards decide if you ride well enough to get a license.

Groom said she is an apprentice. Riders start as apprentices and have a year to get 40 wins. The apprenticeship starts after a rider's fifth win.

Apprentices have as long as they want to get the first five wins but after the fifth one the stewards start counting, she said.

Then the apprentices have one year to do it, unless they get sick, injured or go back to school.

"I guess they figure after the fifth one you ought to know how to do it, and you should be able to get a bunch of wins now and then," she said. "After that, you become a professional jockey."

Groom has won two races, but one of those races was on an unsanctioned track.

The advantage of an owner having an apprentice rider is that the rider is allowed to be five pounds off the assigned weight the horse is supposed to carry, she said. They call it a bubble weight. Groom said she is riding for only one owner because it is hard for her to get other people's horses because of school and jockeying only part-time.

Most jockeys, she said, are up at the track every morning riding, and many of them have agents that would hustle up rides for them in the afternoon for the races.

She does not have an agent.

This is not the job for people who like to bet. Jockeys are strictly forbidden to bet on or own horses. They must be in the Jock's Room an hour before the race, and they cannot leave it until the race.

Jockeys are also required to ride to the best of their ability, Groom said.

If it looks like the jockey is not making the horse run to its full potential, the jockey can get into trouble.

Also, jockeys cannot clip the heels of another horse or hinder another horse in any way. Clipping is running one horse up onto the heels of another horse in front of it.

Even with all the restrictions, being a jockey has its rewards, Groom said.

"When I'm out there doing really good, I'm like 'Oh, it's great' and, you know, you just get a high from it," she said.

Groom said even when she is racing badly as soon as the race is over, she wants to get back on and try again.

Racing is a lot of strategy. The jockey needs to look at the other horses and decide how they will run, because a lot of horses come from behind horses.

Some horses will try to set a fast pace trying to tire the other horses out and win from wire to wire.

There is a racing form where riders can look up an unfamiliar horse that tells its racing history.

These forms contain the information that tells what position a horse was running at in each quarter.

"You have to try to get the right position during the race and make your horse comfortable and feel like it's running sensibly," Groom said. "Not too fast, not too slow."

Usually she will try to stay in the position she wants to be in and try to not get boxed in, she said.

Horses will come up, and sometimes she will end up with a horse in front of her, a horse beside her and a horse behind her and there is no way to get out of it.

There is danger inside the gate and on the track.

A lot of horses act up inside the gate.

There are vertical bars for the jockeys to grab and pull themselves off when a horse starts to act up, because sometimes horses will go down in the gates.

If they fall down, they can get stuck underneath and will panic.

If jockeys are unable to get off, they can be injured.

Sometimes horses are standing wrong when the gates open, Groom said. They will leap out and maybe trip or fall down, knocking the jockey off.

"Some horses do break down in races and will get a broken leg," she said. "Usually you can feel a horse starting to move wrong before it actually breaks the leg, and you can pull it usually up in time."

Sometimes it will snap out of nowhere and the horse will fall, she said.

For all this danger and excitement, the pay can either be high or low.

Every race has a different purse amount and the amount of money the jockey gets is based on that, Groom said.

The winning horse would get 60 percent of the purse amount, while the winning jockey would get ten percent of what the horse wins, she said.

The other horses would get a flat fee of $30-45, she said.

It is based on the amount of the purse and where they are placed.

"You get your check every week for how many races you rode and what winning money you won and your flat fee for riding the horses," Groom said.

Even with all the dangers, restrictions and pay, racing does pay off when there is a chance of crossing the finish line first and winning all the roses and the glory.

Weisenberger, left, and Groom unsaddle and unbridle Poncho Mia after a workout. Groom works out with Fowles' horses three times a week.

► Music

19 country stars to play at Tuttle

Phil Kellum
staff reporter

The weekend of June 21-23, 19 top country music performers will gather at Tuttle Creek State Park to perform at the Country Stampede music festival.

The concert is being billed as Kansas' first mega-country music festival.

The headliners of the event are Tim McGraw, Tanya Tucker, Little Texas and comedian Jeff Foxworthy.

Other performers include Blackhawk, Chris LeDoux, Tracy Lawrence, Confederate Railroad and Faith Hill, among many others.

A total of more than 30 hours of entertainment will be provided during the weekend.

The event is being organized by Liz Neste of Neste Event Marketing. This will be the 19th event of this nature in the United States she has been involved with, she said.

Planning began in August of last year, with a marketing study of the area, and acts began to be booked in September, Neste said.

The acts are being booked by Gil Cunningham of Omaha's Don Romeo Agency, who is one of the top buyers of country music in the country, Neste said.

In addition to live music, there will be a saloon area with additional entertainment, food, craft vendors and sponsor exhibits.

The sponsors for Country Stampede include Gambino's Pizza, Pepsi, Miller, Schwan's, Best Buy and Tony Lama, among others.

Manhattan was chosen as the site for Country Stampede for various reasons.

"We decided it was the best place in Kansas to have a festival, because Manhattan has a lot to offer, and because of its proximity to major population bases," Neste said.

"We didn't want to have it in a big city, because when you're routing entertainment, you must have 120-130 miles between dates. That way, the performers can also play dates in Kansas City as well," she added.

Most of the artists playing the event are on tour, and Manhattan is just one stop on their tour, Neste said.

Neste said there are plans to make this an annual event.

"It's a $2 million venture to put on. It's very large," she said.

Block & Bridle vends $275 VIP concert tickets

Phil Kellum
staff reporter

The Country Stampede country music festival that will take place in Tuttle Creek State Park June 21-23 has connections to K-State.

The Block & Bridle Club is selling VIP tickets to the event through May 10.

Sarah McGinn, Block & Bridle Club reporter, said the Optimist Club came and spoke to the club and asked it to assist in appealing to a different crowd.

The VIP tickets cost $275 for a three-day pass to the festival.

They include special parking, reserved seating in the first 20 rows, a continental breakfast each morning, complimentary beer and soda and meals served twice a day featuring T-bone steaks, shrimp stir-fry and marinated pork tenderloin.

Block & Bridle Club has only sold two or three tickets themselves, McGinn said.

"It's not a real big attention-getter I guess. Maybe it's too much money," she said.

The club found out about the ticket sales right before spring break, McGinn said.

The club has done a lot of advertising for the event. It has been involved in hanging up fliers on campus and around Manhattan.

McGinn said members have also been doing a lot of word-of-mouth advertising on campus.

They have also traveled to Topeka and other surrounding towns to put up posters and fliers to draw in country music fans from outside of Manhattan for the show.

"I think it's a good deal, considering the route for regular tickets. If you want to eat, it's going to cost you. If you park, it's going to cost you. If you want to drink anything while you're there, it's going to cost you," McGinn said.

"You have to provide your own seating. The meals they're going to be serving (with the VIP tickets) aren't cold hamburgers and chips. They're going to be cooking steaks and pork chops and having complimentary beer and soda."

The VIP tickets are also transferable between people. Friends can split the cost and each go a different day, McGinn said.

For more information, go to Weber 134 or call 539-2799 by May 10.

Kevin Gill, sophomore in radio and television, helps put out a fire that burned parts of K-State's beef research pastures north of Manhattan earlier this year. Gill is a volunteer firefighter at station 17 of the Riley County Rural Fire Department.

► VOLUNTEERING

Student fights fires, braves danger zones

Sara Edwards
staff writer

Bright lights and loud sirens are initially what drew Kevin Gill into fire fighting.

Now Gill, sophomore in radio and television, volunteers as a firefighter at station 17 of the Riley County Rural Fire Department, and he has learned the job consists of a lot more than lights and sirens.

"I like doing it. I wouldn't want to do something else. There's a big adrenaline rush that comes with just the idea of helping people you don't know out," he said.

As a volunteer, Gill helps the fire department whenever he is needed. He wears a radio pager most of the time. He only fights fires he is called to. Whether he goes depends on how big the incident is.

He said he has been called out of class a few times to fight fires. He said some of his teachers know about this and they are pretty understanding.

Gill originally got into fire fighting because some of his friends did it when he lived in New York. He said he trains two Thursdays a month for a total of four hours, and he also does special training.

Each battalion chief requires a certain amount of training to become a volunteer firefighter, which includes observing other firefighters.

"You learn a lot on hand by watching and experiencing, not just hearing about it," he said. "You really don't know what it's like until you're in it."

Although being a firefighter can be exciting, there is always danger.

"It's pretty dangerous. A burning building is definitely not safe. It's a hazard. There's a chance you will not come out the same or will never come out," he said.

The recent fire on Top of the World made Gill nervous. He said he could see the smoke even as he was driving out to his station.

When he got to Top of the World, the fire was spreading fast. It caught one house on fire, and it spread to a second house. The fire line was right up to the houses, but they managed to save all three.

"It was unpredictable. It happened really fast. It was the closest I came to losing a house to grass fire," he said.

He said the fire at the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area was also a challenge. It took them about 12 hours to put out.

Gill said it was difficult because their brush trucks only hold 250 gallons of water. Every time they had to go refill water, the fire would come back to where they had fought it to.

"You just run around all day being icky all day," he said.

Gill said he plans to graduate first and become a full-time firefighter.

We take news tips.

Derby Days

Sigma Chi continues 60-year-old benefit

QUICK read

► Derby Days, an annual event, continues throughout this week as Sigma Chi raises money for the Children's Miracle Network.

Jessica White
staff reporter

Sigma Chi fraternity will sponsor a philanthropy this week with a tradition more than 60 years old.

Sigma Chi Derby Days began in 1933 at the University of California and is sponsored in one form or another at more than 75 percent of the Sigma Chi chapters to benefit the Children's Miracle Network.

At K-State, Derby Days involves competition among sororities in a dance contest, a volleyball tournament and field events like tug-of-war.

"A lot of sororities really go after this," said Brian Conley, sophomore in business and Derby Days chairman at K-State.

"There's some sororities that just do it to do it, but then there's some sororities that take this stuff really seriously," he said.

Other schools have different events in their Derby Days.

Derby Days at the University of Kansas includes a Derby Queen, a dance contest known as Sig'n'Dales, and an auction known as Rent-A-Sig. Men are auctioned off to sorority members who put them to work. Awards are given for the most KU spirit and the most community service done by the men during the 24 hours they are being rented.

Ben Karel, president of the Sigma Chi chapter at KU, said this year two men were dressed like Jayhawks and had to pour red and blue Kool-Aid for people on campus.

Other men were taken to the K-State Student Union to sing the KU fight song and alma mater.

At KU, the Derby Queen is chosen at a dinner attended by nominees from each sorority and their house moms, Karel said. The women are all asked two random questions like, "If you were a shoe, what would you be and why?" or "If you could travel in time, who would you talk to and why?" The answers are judged by the house moms, and a Derby Queen is chosen.

A more traditional Derby Days is celebrated at the University of Oklahoma.

Conley said Derby Days originally got its name when Sigs would wear derby hats, and sorority members could earn points for their houses by stealing the hats, an activity that still goes on in Oklahoma.

Jared Smith, president of Sigma Chi at Oklahoma, said its Derby Days is one of the biggest philanthropies on his campus, and it was definitely the biggest philanthropy in the fall.

Events at Oklahoma included the usual field events like tug-of-war on a daily basis and also unusual events like sumo wrestling, a Miss Venus pageant and talent show, and a Sign-A-Sig contest.

For the Sign-A-Sig contest, fraternity members wear T-Shirts that sorority members sign.

The sororities get points each time one of their members signed a Sig.

Smith said the Sign-A-Sig contest is often weird for the pledges because Derby Days takes place in the first two weeks of school each year.

Oklahoma also includes a theme party in its Derby Days.

Smith said this year there was a Harley party that included having a Harley Davidson club drive through the house. Smith said the Harley party went well.

Mark Vance, president of Sigma Chi at the University of Colorado at Boulder, said it was unable to have a Derby Days this year due to underage drinking in the past.

"The police threatened to seize our property," he said.

Vance said the fraternity thought the changes that would have to be made would make the philanthropy less popular, so it was taking a year off and would make changes before sponsoring it again.

"We're wanting to do it next year," he said.

Vance said changes would include focusing more on being a fundraiser and scheduling events at places other than its house.

Aside from being what Vance described as a four-day rage, Derby Days at Colorado used to include events like tug-of-war, volleyball, basketball and a tricycle race. There was also a mural competition and a skit competition.

More rain needed to save 'mostly poor' wheat crop

Associated Press

WICHITA — The Kansas wheat crop remained in mostly poor to very poor condition at the end of last week, and weekend rains were not expected to help much.

In its weekly crop weather report, Kansas Agricultural Statistics said the crop condition was 12-percent good, 29-percent fair and 59-percent poor to very poor as of Friday.

Conditions were about the same as a week earlier and did not take into account weekend rains.

Jim Shroyer, a K-State agronomist, said the rains would not save the failed wheat crop.

"Oh, it might double some yields, say from two bushels to four bushels or from four bushels to eight bushels," he said.

The state's average statewide yields are traditionally around 35 bushels per acre.

"We'll always take rain, especially during a drought like this," he said.

"When you get an inch all across the state and then a week later you get another inch, that's a drought-buster. Getting 30-hundredths isn't enough," he said.

Rainfall amounts varied across the state. Two of the driest areas, southwest and west central Kansas, got very little moisture. Elsewhere amounts ranged from a half-inch to a little more than two inches.

Shroyer said the rain was helpful for farmers waiting for moisture to plant milo or other fall-harvested crops, especially farmers who had to tear up poor wheat.

KAS said wind damage to the Kansas wheat crop was 9-percent severe, 21-percent moderate and 29-percent light. An estimated 41 percent had no damage.

Freeze damage was estimated at 14-percent severe, 18-percent moderate and 26-percent light. Forty-two percent of the crop was reported without freeze damage.

Farmers were spraying for brown wheat mites, greenbugs and armyworms. KAS estimated 6 percent of the crop was severely infested with insects, 10 percent was moderate and 23 percent was light. Sixty-one percent of the crop had no insect problems, KAS said.

Cop saves deaf man using sign language

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A cool-headed cop used sign language to convince a suicidal deaf man to back away from the ledge of a Manhattan highrise.

"I just kept signing to him, 'Please, I'm here to help you,'" said Officer Liz Cook, whose brother is deaf.

The man — identified as Vincent Micoli, 31, of Manhattan, N.Y. — eventually agreed to be hospitalized.

The tense episode began about 7 a.m. when police received a report of a possible jumper. They determined he was deaf and checked their list of officers who know sign language.

In her 14 years on the job, the officer had been summoned to take statements from deaf crime victims.

"Nothing dramatic," she said.

Then she encountered Micoli, distraught, toeing the edge of the roof of the 32-story building in upper Manhattan's Washington Heights neighborhood.

Officers stood nearby, powerless to communicate. Below, police had closed the street and inflated a giant cushion, a desperate measure for breaking falls.

Micoli was still staring down when Cook arrived at about 8 a.m. She tapped the ledge with a ring to get his attention, then started signing.

When Micoli asked Cook and the others to go away, she persisted. She explained what was wrong. He signed that his girlfriend had been killed in a car accident.

"I signed to him that I was very, very sorry," the officer said. "He seemed to relax a little bit after that."

After several minutes of coaxing, he finally walked toward her.

"I put my arm around him," Cook said. "He cried a little bit. But he kind of shrugged it off. He started signing, 'I'm OK. I'm OK.'"

THE WORLD IS GOING TO POT, I MEAN, COCAINE, I MEAN SEXUAL ASSAULT

What if David Damon were one of us? Just a slob like one of us? Just a stranger on the bus who doesn't have alumni footing his tuition bill while he fondles a fellow student, trying to get himself stoned? Oh, sorry if that ticked anyone off. I deserve another chance to redeem myself, so on to the next Smattering.

THAT IS WHY THE LAW SCHOOL IS AT KU

Let's discuss what people would say about certain criminal activities, depending on whether the alleged perpetrator of the crimes are members of the Wildcat football team, shall we?

Non-football player in court for drunk driving: "You've exhausted my patience. I sentence you to six months in jail."

Football player: "Heat exhaustion? Why didn't you say so? You're free to go!"

Non-football player charged with beating up a dog: "You deserve to be beaten just like you beat up that poor old dog."

Football player: "You poor thing! If that dog barked at you, it deserved a rock in the head. Had it coming."

Non-football player with a criminal record after being convicted of sexual assault: "Here's your cell mate."

Football player: "Here are your teammates." Dadgummit, I think I have offended even more people. Oh, well. I had a rough childhood. I deserve another chance, too.

THIS WEEK'S STUPID INTERNET NEWSGROUP (S.I.N.) (alt.good.morning)

First of all, I find "good morning" to be a contradiction in terms. I have never had a good morning.

Whenever people say it to me, it is usually morning when they say it, which is a good indicator that I should either still be in bed or getting ready to go to bed.

People on this newsgroup are all cheery and peppy, full of orange juice, Cocoa Pebbles and English muffins. You know these are the folks who mow their lawns at 7:30 on Saturday mornings, too. How repugnant!

THIS WEEK'S PATHETIC INTERNET SITE SUGGESTION (P.I.S.S.) (http://www.mallscapes.com/dream/)

The only country in the Western Hemisphere without a standing military force has brought us this, the Dream Girls of Costa Rica Web Site.

Those men out there who lack the basic social graces to get a date with even the most desperate of women (heads up, you Internet studs!) will be grateful for this site because there is no need for you to shower, dress well or even have a conversation in English to meet one of these women.

Thanks to this site, you can e-mail order a bride much like you would a new hard drive for your computer. Isn't capitalism just so great?

Well ... maybe not. Even so, if the girls of Costa Rica look like this, I cannot wait to see the women.

those who wish to camp out at Tuttle Creek for the event. All sites are within walking distance of the concert area. There will be more than 1,200 sites available. Some will have electrical hookups and others will not. The camping areas open at 10 a.m. June 20.

The preferred campsites with electricity command a higher fee than those without.

The preferred campsites through May 14 are $55 and $65 after May 15.

The general campsites are $25 each through May 14 and $30 each after May 15. All campsites prices are good for the entire weekend.

Tickets and campsites have been on sale since Feb. 19.

Three-day passes are available for $45 each through May 14. From May 15-June 20, they are $50 each, and they will be $55 each at the gate. The three-day tickets are also not transferable.

One-day tickets are $18.50 through May 14, and they are $25 each after May 15 and are only good for any one day of the show.

All seating is general admission except for limited VIP seats.

Neste said at least 15,000-20,000 people per day are expected to attend the festival.

Tickets and campsites can be purchased by calling 539-2222 or 1-800-795-8091.

Tickets are also available through Ticketmaster but will be subject to service charges.

"It's a high-energy, fun event. Even if you're not a country music fan, it's a great place to be. It's a big social event. It's a party. People go there to have a good time. It's also a great entertainment value," Neste said.

RESEARCH

Impact Report said the overall effect the University has on the state could be upwards of $1.3 billion. This figure includes almost $600 million for the value-added economic consequences of applied research.

The $51,145,001 in extramural funding figure for fiscal year 1995 followed the upward trend in awarded dollar amounts for the past few years.

"The increase in awards from $27.2 million in 1990 to $51.1 million this year amounts to an 88-percent increase that places Kansas State University in the ranks of the top 70 public research universities in the nation," Timothy Donoghue, vice provost for research, said in the Research Awards Fiscal Year 1995 report.

Beverly Page is an information specialist in the Office of Research and Sponsored Programs who distributes funding information for interested parties.

Parts of her job include browsing the Federal Register, which monitors the actions of federal agencies, and producing a weekly funding bulletin. She also looks for notices of grant programs in several data bases and in foundation reports, booklets and pamphlets.

"We look for areas where there is a lack of or need for research and pass this information along," Page said.

In some cases, funding comes from agencies which publish announcements of research they want done and people apply for funding to do that research. In other cases, researchers already have an idea of what they want to do and they then seek funding from agencies who they think might be interested in the outcomes.

Page said there is also a small grants program in place at K-State.

"The small grants program would provide a few thousand dollars to get started on a project. With one of these small grants, researchers can gather data or try to get some initial results. This way they can also indicate the chance of success or potential of the research," Page said.

The College of Veterinary Medicine has turned out research for such groups as the USDA and the Kansas Racing Commission. The college had 3.4 percent of the 1995 fiscal year awards, with a dollar value of $1,726,676.

"There have been many situations we have contributed to development in the state," said Harish Minocha, associate dean for research in the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Minocha said the biggest industry in Kansas is the beef and cattle industry and much of the college's research deals with new methodologies and diagnostic techniques for enhancing immune response in those animals.

"There have been vaccines, which have been developed and vaccine procedures recommended for change," Minocha said.

In fiscal year 1994, the College of Veterinary Medicine research positively affected the cattle industry by $5 million. Research leading to patented flea-control technology resulted in projected sales of more than $10 million per year, according to the economic impact report. These are only a few of the effects that research from the college has had on the animal industry in Kansas and in other areas.

As the economic impact report explains, there are two separate kinds of research — basic and applied.

"Most extramural awards at the University support the more basic research endeavors of the faculty, research that lays the foundation for more applied investigations with the potential to lead to commercialization," the report said.

It is difficult to estimate the economic effects basic research might produce. However, a $1.3 billion overall effect figure suggests that research coming out of K-State is improving the quality of life for the state of Kansas and for the nation.

3 K-State musicians to play selections at All Faiths Chapel

■ Music department to feature various compositions tonight

Portia Sisco
staff writer

Three members of the K-State music department will perform as the "Trio Débranché" at 8 tonight in All Faiths Chapel.

Cora Cooper, assistant professor of music, will play the violin for this faculty trio.

"It's really a varied program," Cooper said.

The first half of the program will feature a late Hayden trio and two selections by Lili Boulanger, Cooper said.

Joseph Brumeloe, assistant professor of music, will play piano and David Littrell, orchestra director, will play the cello.

"We've just clicked so well. They're good musicians," Cooper said.

This will be their second significant performance as the "Trio Débranché."

The two selections by Boulanger are "The Sad Evening" and "Spring Morning."

"Lili died when she was 25. These are some of her last works," Cooper said.

Lili's sister, Nadia Boulanger, was a famous music teacher in France. People traveled all around the world to study with her, Cooper said.

"They're very intense. 'The Sad Evening' is dark and dissonant. We thought we'd play a sad one and then 'Spring Morning' would be the happy one, but it isn't really. It's evil, kind of manic," Cooper said.

The second half of the performance will begin with the Shostakovich trio.

"Boulanger and Shostakovich are both 20th century, but they are very accessible 20th century. They're very emotional works, and they're readily available to any level of listener," Cooper said.

Shostakovich was a Russian composer. In this piece, there is a lot of anti-war sentiment.

The best word to describe it is sarcastic, Cooper said.

"The Shostakovich is so much fun. It's a rich piece," Cooper said.

The "Trio Débranché" is already discussing which pieces to play for its next performance a year from now.

Some of Cooper's students will be in the audience.

Performing in front of her students is different from performing in front of strangers, Cooper said.

"You have to set a good example, as well as just do the best for yourself," she said.

Fitness Facts For best weight loss results, combine a slight caloric restriction with an aerobic-type exercise; i.e. walking, jogging, biking or swimming. The exercise should be done continuously for 30-60 minutes, 3-5 days a week.

Nutrition Notes As people try to lose weight for the summer, it is important to remember that diet needs to be combined with exercise. Calorie restriction alone may lead to the loss of muscle mass instead of fat. A negative caloric balance of 500 kcal per day along with at least 20 minutes of vigorous exercise, three times a week, will allow for about one pound of fat loss.

Who's Who

at Rec Services

Susanna Pine, junior in kinesiology, loves teaching aerobics. She has been teaching aerobics at the Recreation Complex for over a year. "I have an absolute blast teaching," Susanna said. "Everybody I've taught has been fantastic!" Susanna loves all the changes the Rec has made this past year. "The facilities and equipment are just awesome," she said. Susanna's hobbies include playing volleyball, singing and teaching aerobics. After this semester, Susanna and her husband are moving to Seattle where she will attend the University of Washington.

Melany Swedlund, from Topeka, is a senior in elementary education. She has been working as an assistant building supervisor at the Recreation Complex for two years. "I love working here," she said. "I love the people I work with, and I also like seeing my friends come out here to exercise." In her free time, Melany enjoys working out, swimming and going out with her friends. In the fall semester, Melany will be student teaching in Topeka. Following graduation, Melany plans to teach kindergarten.

Ashley Doud graduated in December in secondary education. She is currently substitute teaching and working as an Intramural Supervisor. Ashley has been employed at Recreational Services the better part of her college career. She worked more than three years, as an official and has been an Intramural Supervisor for more than a year. Ashley said she really enjoys the overall atmosphere at the Recreation Complex. "I enjoy being a part of the intramural program," she said. "I also love the people I work with. We've all become great friends." Ashley is in the process of planning her wedding for this summer and plans to teach history following graduation.

Police arrest, charge man suspected of rape

Abbi Hake

A Manhattan man was brought into custody Tuesday night in connection with the rape of a Manhattan woman that occurred early Tuesday morning.

Carl A. Mitchell, 29, was apprehended by authorities in Topeka Tuesday around 11 p.m. and was transported back to Manhattan.

"He's here in our jail," Riley County Police Department Captain Steve French said.

French said Mitchell was charged with aggravated kidnapping, aggravated sodomy, aggravated robbery, aggravated rape and aggravated sexual battery at his arraignment yesterday.

His bond was set at $250,000.

The rape occurred at 2:30 a.m. Tuesday after the woman was pulled from her vehicle at knife point on the northeast side of Manhattan.

Afterward, the suspect ordered her to drive him to Junction City, where she dropped him off in the Washington Street area.

The victim notified the Geary County Police Department at 5:10 a.m. Tuesday.

French said the police do not think the rape has any connection with any of the other three recent rapes in the area. A preliminary hearing date is yet to be determined.

Bernard Pitts, director of the K-State Student Union, was named president of the Association of College Unions International.

Although Pitts has only been at K-State since October 1995, work concerning student unions is nothing new to him.

"What started out to be a part-time job became a profession and a career for me," Pitts said.

Pitts began his involvement with student unions when he was a student at Southern Illinois University-Edwardsville by being an assistant night manager of the University Center.

There he earned his bachelor's degree in business administration.

Pitts also attended Oregon State University, where he earned a master's degree in college student services administration.

He was also an assistant professor and associate director of educational activities.

Before coming to K-State, Pitts had been the associate director of Iowa State University's Memorial Union since 1991. He also served as director and executive secretary of the University Union Inc. at California State University-Hayward for six years.

Pitts also was the associate director of West Virginia University's Mountainlair, as well as director of the College Center and Student Activities at Western Oregon State College.

TDM receives city permit, keys to facility

■ TDM will start production of its bi-fuel vehicles May 20

Brent Johnson
contributing writer

Transportation Design and Manufacturing has the keys and the occupancy permit to its new alternative-fuel vehicle plant.

On Wednesday morning, Greg Vanover, TDM project manager, received the keys to the new plant from Roger Schultz, owner of Schultz Construction, and the occupancy permit from Manhattan city manager Gary Greer.

Vanover said he was excited not only for TDM, but also for himself.

"I can't believe how this building has taken shape and come together in the last six weeks," he said. "When I first got here there were no doors, and snow was blowing all over the inside of the plant."

Immediately following the key and permit exchange, TDM took the opportunity to introduce its first Manhattan employees. The employees introduced themselves and described their position involving the conversion of the Ford Contour.

The Ford Contour will be brought in from the Ford Claycomo plant in the Kansas City area. Once in the Manhattan plant, the Contour will be converted into a bi-fuel vehicle, fueled by both gasoline and compressed natural gas.

Bob Browns, TDM quality engineer, said the plant is on schedule to begin production of the Contour in the latter part of May.

"We're scheduled to get started on May 20," he said. "But that date is purely depending on if we have the parts here."

Vanover said the new plant will soon be able to convert 15 Ford Contours a day.

"We can ultimately even increase the number we convert a day, depending on the demand," he said.

The new TDM employees began training April 26 in the K-State Manufacturing Learning Center.

Geoff Bouma, TDM process development, said training went exceptionally well.

"The new employees have about another week of training left," Bouma said. "But they've come along so fast, if we had to, we could probably start production tomorrow."

John Collinson, new employee for TDM, said he's excited to get going.

"I'm ready to get started on these Ford Contours," he said. "Overall, the training has been great. Most of the work is mechanical, and the really detailed instructions make everything really easy."

George Gatzoulis, TDM plant manager, also expressed his excitement and eagerness to get started.

"The amount of effort in this project has been nothing less than excellent," Gatzoulis said.

Gatzoulis said the automotive world will soon look at Manhattan as the place for automotive alternative-fuel technologies.

"We built it. They will come," he said.

While the production part of the new TDM plant is already finished, the front office-end of the facility is scheduled to be finished July 1. Schultz said the construction for the front end is on schedule.

On July 1, Vanover said TDM is planning an event to celebrate the official opening of the plant.

Manhattan mayor Sydney Carlin said she is happy she witnessed the first big event as a result of the economic development sales tax.

"I'm really excited about this," she said. "I want to see it continue in the future."

A new semi-partnership at Java Espresso and Bakery will soon bring about many changes.

As of midnight last Sunday, Kent Dean, owner of Dean Liquor, entered a semi-partnership with Jean Riffel, former owner and manager of Java.

"We had to do a lot of fast, short-term negotiations over the weekend in order to get the doors to remain open Monday morning," Dean said.

remain open.

He said he is running both Dean Liquor and Java with lots of help from the management at Dean Liquor.

"I am in a temporary semi-partnership and in a full management position at Java," Dean said. Dean said he and Riffel are Negotiator fails to end standoff with Freeman

■ After 2-1/2-hours of negotiations, Montana Freeman refuse to surrender to authorities

Associated Press

JORDAN, Mont. — Former Green Beret Col. James "Bo" Gritz gave up trying to persuade the Freemen to surrender Wednesday, saying the anti-government extremists have taken an oath to God not to leave their compound until their demands are met.

Gritz, a leader of the self-styled patriot movement who helped negotiate an end to the deadly siege at Ruby Ridge, Idaho, in 1992, called it quits after a 2-1/2-hour session — his fifth meeting with the group.

Gritz said the Freemen were back to their earlier position that they will submit only to a tribunal of their own kind; they will not submit to the federal courts.

The Freemen "have had communications with God — Yahweh," and vowed not to leave their ranch unless their demands are met, Gritz said. "I don't see any way they're going to deny this oath to God."

Gritz didn't sound optimistic about a peaceful resolution. He said Freemen told him that "Yahweh has placed an invisible barrier around their sanctuary that no more enemies can penetrate."

The tribunal must consist of 23 people who are completely debt-free, do not work for the government and are not lawyers, Gritz said. Also, the members of the tribunal must reach a unanimous verdict.

The Freemen refuse to recognize the government's authority. They have their own laws and courts based on their selective interpretation of the Bible, the U.S. Constitution and other documents.

Members of the group are wanted on state and federal charges ranging from writing bad checks to threatening to kidnap and kill a U.S. judge.

The standoff began March 25 after two of their leaders were arrested.

Gritz began negotiating with the group on Saturday along with Jack McLamb, a retired Arizona policeman.

Gritz said he wanted to include white separatist Randy Weaver but said the FBI wouldn't let him.

Weaver's wife and 14-year-old son and a U.S. marshal were killed in an 11-day standoff at Ruby Ridge in 1992 before Gritz persuaded Weaver to surrender.

Gritz said he and McLamb would leave Jordan immediately, and further negotiations would be in the hands of Assistant Attorney General John Connor Jr., who has been meeting separately with the Freemen.

Gritz said he believes the standoff will continue until the FBI moves in and arrests the people at the compound. "I think it will come down to a confrontation of wills."

Government ends Hooters lawsuit

Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — The government has quietly ended its four-year sexual discrimination probe of Hooters, coming to the same conclusion as its sometimes snickering critics have — we have better things to do.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission had demanded a $22-million fine from the 170-restaurant chain after looking into complaints by four Chicago men who said they were denied the chance to serve suds alongside buxom young waitresses.

The EEOC also wanted Hooters to hire male waiters, compensate any men it had turned down for jobs and set up a scholarship fund to enhance employment opportunities for men.

Ridiculous, said Rep. Harris Fawell, R-Ill., who had questioned the investigation, given the agency's limited financial resources and heavy caseload.

The EEOC wouldn't say how much it cost to conduct the investigation.

Columnists had a field day as Hooters fought both the EEOC and a private lawsuit filed by the men, asserting a constitutional right to have only females squeeze into its skimpy orange shorts and tight white shirts.

The chain even put out a mocking ad campaign that featured a burly, mustachioed man — Vince Gigliotti, who manages a Hooters in Tampa — wearing a blonde wig, short shorts, stuffed shirt and bedroom eyes.

The caption: "Come on, Washington. Get a grip."

The issue was a serious one, according to a March 6 letter from EEOC Chairman Gilbert F. Casellas to Fawell, chairman of a House subcommittee on employment. But, Casellas acknowledged, the agency did have more important matters to concentrate on.

"Denying any American a job simply because of his or her sex is a serious issue which should be taken seriously," Casellas wrote.

"The particular factual issues raised by Hooters do not transform this into a frivolous case or a subject for locker-room humor." But, Casellas added, since a private class-action lawsuit is pending, "it is wiser for the EEOC to devote its scarce litigation resources to other cases."

The response at the Tampa Hooters was mixed on Wednesday.

Gigliotti said his restaurant just wouldn't have been the same with men wearing the trademark uniforms. "Women don't look at guys the same way men look at women," he said.

But don't tell that to Mary Pinion, a mortgage broker across the room, having lunch with five of her female mortgage processors.

Maryland joins struggle against tobacco industry

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Maryland became the eighth state Wednesday to sue the tobacco industry to recover the cost of treating Medicaid patients with smoking-related illnesses.

The tobacco companies "have knowingly peddled a killer product. ... Now we will take them to a courthouse to seek justice for their deceitful conduct," Attorney General J. Joseph Curran Jr. said in announcing the $13-billion lawsuit.

The suit names 10 defendants, including Philip Morris Inc., R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., Lorillard Tobacco Co. and the American Tobacco Co.

Phillip Morris said it would vigorously defend against the lawsuit. R.J. Reynolds spokeswoman Peggy Carter said Maryland already receives compensation through cigarette taxes.

The state receives about $137 million a year in the excise tax but pays $1.5 billion each year in tobacco-related costs, including medical treatment, sick leave and loss of worker productivity, Curran said.

Florida, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Texas and West Virginia all have lawsuits pending against the industry. New Jersey and Connecticut have said they plan to sue.

See women's tennis team in NCAA tourney

QUICKread

► Congratulations to the K-State women's tennis team for getting a bid to the NCAA tennis tournament. Students can drive to Lawrence to see the match on Friday.

The K-State men's basketball team won't be the only ones who can say they made it to the Big Dance this year.

Congratulations to members of the K-State women's tennis team. For them, it's time to put on some dancing shoes.

After finishing fifth in the Big 8 last year and fourth this year, the team received a bid to the NCAA tennis tournament yesterday. This is the team's first-ever trip to the tournament. K-State's team was selected based on its won-lost record, eligibility of players and strength of schedule.

Tennis coach Steve Bietau said reaching the tournament was probably the team's biggest goal and said the team is very excited and proud to have received the bid. Bietau has been with the team for 12 years.

The honor of the tournament bid was due in part to the outstanding performance of a pair of singles players and two doubles teams.

Senior Karina Kuregian and sophomore Yana Dorodnova are ranked nationally among singles players.

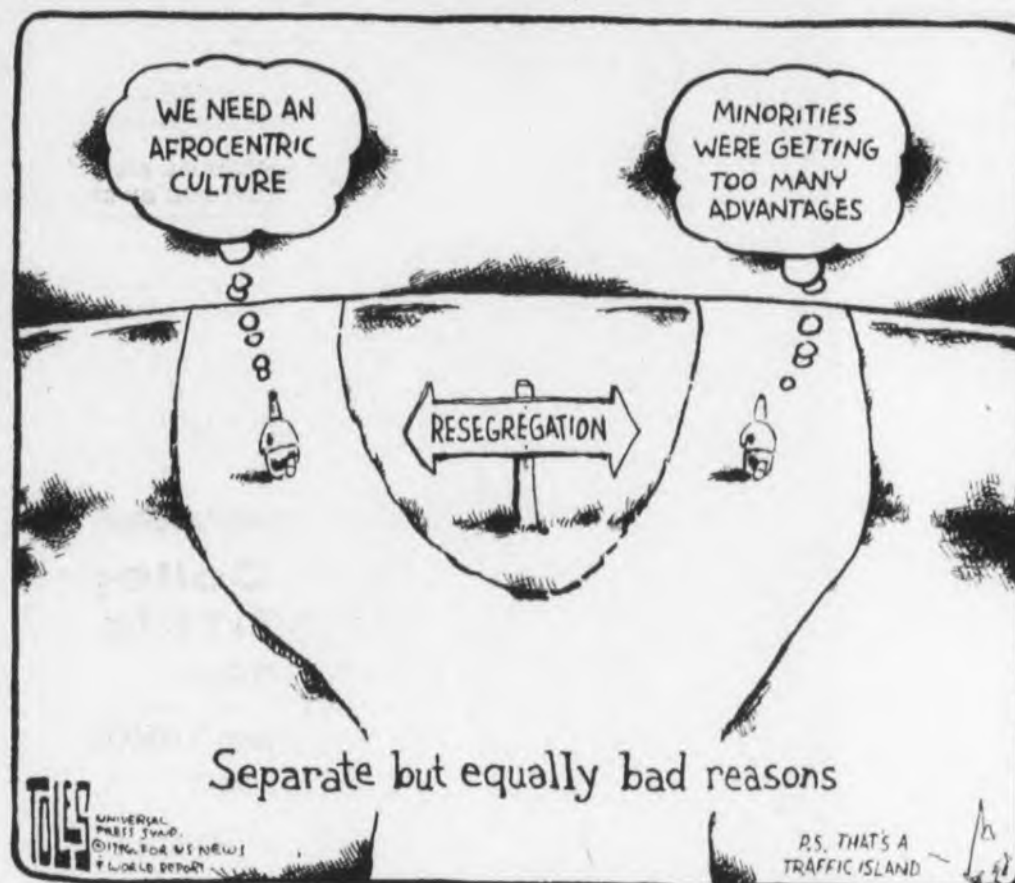

Despite battling Graves disease at the start of the season, Kuregian finished the season with a 14-1 record overall and as the Big 8 No. 2 singles champion.

Thanks to this exceptional play, Kuregian, Dorodnova and their teammates will be seeded fourth in the Central Region when the tournament starts this weekend.

The team will be facing Utah in the first round of the tournament on the campus of the University of Kansas Friday.

Lawrence is only 90 miles from Manhattan, so plenty of purple can make the trek to see our women play. It'll be a lot more exciting than studying.

Rules for the sick

I'm sick.
I'll apologize in advance if certain grammatical niceties are not in place. It's hard to concentrate when the letters float above the screen and sing "Hollywood."

I have no idea what I caught. My throat is sore, my body aches, my balance is shot, I'm hot when everyone else is cold, and I'm tired all the time. I think my hair even hurts.

It all adds up to the seasonal crud I always seem to catch last.

I refuse to give in to this because there are only six more days of classes left, and anyone can run on pure momentum for six days. Besides, I've got a weekend in there to recuperate.

Being sick is an interesting experience — every little thing your body does and encounters is magnified a hundred times. Lie real still, and you can feel your blood pump and your synapses attempt to fire. Encounter someone with a loud voice, and your head tries to split in two.

All of this leads me to believe there should be certain rules for sick people that need to be followed by the healthy members of society. Here they are.

■ I would be willing to wear a sign or a ribbon indicating I am contagious so no one tries to shake my hand. This would also serve as a convenient excuse for when I drift away from conversations and end up standing in a corner listening to my head throb.

■ I think healthy people should give the infirm among us a clear berth unless otherwise directed. It's bad enough I feel bad. I don't need to be polite also.

■ I want to be excused from classes for a couple of days. Most instructors are pretty good about this if you cough on them.

■ Be nice to the ill. Don't price-gauge the Kleenex, and offer to share your cough drops.

■ If they run out of cough syrup, make a run to the liquor store for rum and hot tea. Honey makes it seem more medicinal.

There are three different kinds of sick people. There are the denial types, who insist on soldiering on to the detriment of their health and those around them. Typhoid Mary is a famous example of a sick person who just refused to slow down.

My mother is a sympathy type. She wants attention when she is sick and is also willing to give it to those who are sick around her.

My father and I are leave-me-alone-and-let-me-sleep-sorts. We don't want tapoca, the television or even a hot meal cooked by someone who loves us. We want a quiet place and a clear path to the bathroom. Unlimited access to the remote helps too.

I hope I feel better by the time this thing runs. As soon as I'm finished here, I'm going to try to make soup. Hopefully, the kitchen knows a different show tune.

dropped the ball. I have never talked to a woman who was upset that her husband, brother, son or dad went to a Promise Keepers conference.

However, feminists insist on misjudging and mislabeling this as a sexist movement.

I remember the first PK conference I went to in Boulder, Colo. two summers ago. The National Organization for Women flew banners over the stadium that read "Only weak men fear strong women" and "Pro-mise Keepers, losers weepers."

This is how the movement is being perceived by some women, and it is a misinterpretation. As far as the statement that "weak men fear strong women" is concerned, the only reason men are attending PK is they want to become stronger men.

Becoming a stronger man does not include becoming a physically stronger man so you can beat your wife harder. It does not include becoming a stronger man so that you can run faster when you walk out on your wife.

Becoming a stronger man means having the strength so that when the women in our lives need someone to lean on, we might be a sturdy pillar. It means we are building strength to lift women up (and not look up their skirts while doing so) and treat them with the utmost respect and esteem.

Now when it comes to the "Promise Keepers, losers weepers" banner, I am afraid the feminists are right. We are losers. We have failed in our roles as fathers, husbands, brothers, boyfriends and men. Promise Keepers is aimed at changing that.

Yes, in the past we have been losers, and I can promise you most of the men who have attended these conferences have wept many tears of regret over this fact — myself included.

That is why women are not supposed to go to these conferences. Do you really think that men would let their guard down enough to cry when they are around women? Heck no! There is something called the peacock syndrome in which men feel the need to strut their stuff around women. This just inhibits the ability to break down the walls that most men have built.

So please women do not misunderstand this movement. It is not about excluding you. It is about learning how to be better men so we can serve you better.

I promise that.

WILLIAM THOMAS

Last weekend I participated in one of the largest women's movements our generation has ever seen — but there were no women present.

I was one of more than 150,000 men gathered simultaneously in two stadiums (Arrowhead and the Kingdome in Seattle) to figure out what we could do to get our nation back on track.

The movement is called Promise Keepers, and last weekend's event was just one of several sold-out stadium conferences. I have heard it was the only conference in the history of the organization that has not been protested by feminists.

Allow me to clear up any misconceptions in the minds of feminists about this movement.

Contrary to the popular feminist belief, this movement is not about keeping women in the kitchen, barefoot and pregnant, cooking eggs and bacon and poppin' out babies.

In fact, the goal of Promise Keepers is to teach men how to take back some responsibility for what happens in the home — responsibility men have shunned in the last couple generations. It is about building stronger families and helping each other out rather than tearing each other down.

Put simply, there are seven promises of a Promise Keeper. A Promise Keeper is committed to:

■ honoring Jesus Christ through worship, prayer and obedience to God's word in the power of the Holy Spirit.

■ pursuing vital relationships with a few other men, understanding that he needs brothers to help him keep his promises.

■ practicing spiritual, moral, ethical and sexual purity.

■ building strong marriages and families through love, protection and biblical values.

■ supporting the mission of his church by honoring and praying for his pastor, and by actively giving his time and his resources.

■ reaching beyond any racial and denominational barriers to demonstrate the power of biblical unity.

■ influencing his world, being obedient to the Great Commandment (see Mark 12:30-31) and the Great Commission (Matthew 28:19-20).

Notice that nowhere does it say a Promise Keeper should oppress women and admonish them to fix dinner, do all the dishes, take care of the kids and clean the house. In fact, everything listed above is aimed at picking up where we men have

MORE TO LIFE THAN SPORTS

Editor,

Until the citizens of this pitiful excuse for a country begin to realize how athletes are pampered and protected in the name of money, we will be forever haunted by big-headed bullies and millionaire gangsters.

Granted, not all athletes are of David Damon's moral caliber, and these individuals are a welcome addition to any program. There's more to life than sport and winning!

Your coverage of Damon was a refreshing change. I commend you. This type of cutting-edge journalism is the only hope I have for bringing our country back from the path of damnation.

UNIVERSITY HAS LOST FOCUS WITH ATHLETICS

Editor,

This University has totally lost its focus. This past week there have been articles focusing on the past actions of David Damon and all of the rough times he has suffered through and how football coach Bill Snyder is a very fair man. Well, that's a crock.

I am totally appalled by the comments of Snyder and President Jon Wefald and letters from students like Matt Kretsinger and alumni like Kirk Engle. Wake up — get your heads out of your butts and realize that what Damon did to that woman was deplorable and inexcusable.

Engle, a K-State alumnus, wrote in the Monday Collegian that the whole Damon situation was handled unfairly and Snyder could handle the problems better than any court system. That's probably true in the eyes of those charged with crimes because Snyder turns the other cheek and lets these athletes get away with this kind of behavior.

The alumni who support Engle's opinion are a disgrace to this University. All you people care about is football and winning a damn national championship. Guess what folks. A woman was sexually assaulted, and I think that has much more importance than a damn football game.

What happened to anyone caring what Amy Schulz is going through, or what she is feeling? People are so quick to jump to the side of the assailant that they don't even consider the victim. How would you feel if someone assaulted your daughter, your wife or even your mother? Would you support our wonderful football team then?

I used to bleed purple, but now I just don't give a damn. I'm sick of the money I pay for season tickets going to the Defensive Lineman's Defense Fund.

I think the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and some of our campus leaders are blind to the atrocities some athletes get away with simply because they play a game. To Schulz, please know there are quite a few people out here who are proud of you and will always stand behind you and give you the support you need.

CLERK UNDERSTANDS UNION CHECK POLICY

Editor,

Working at a retail store in the Manhattan area, I understand what the K-State Student Union has to do with the county's check policy. All Riley County merchants were mailed a copy of this recommendation.

The writer of the article made a mistake in calling Wal-Mart to verify this information. Wal-Mart is not in Riley County. It is in Pottawatomie County, and its collections guidelines are a bit different. It also does not have the county attorney collecting for it. It has a national corporation to do it.

Please do not vilify the merchants for this practice. It is not their fault. It is the fault of the person(s) writing the bad check.

INDIVIDUAL VALUES BEING DEGRADED BY CELEBRITIES

Editor,

How low will we allow ourselves to take our society down the scale of character?

The April 26 Collegian focused on the rap sheet of football player David Damon, part of which includes the following: 1991, disorderly conduct (dropped); 1992, communicating threats (dropped); 1992-93, four separate charges of possession and intent to sell cocaine (three dropped, one convicted); 1993, possession of marijuana (convicted); 1994, three charges of assault in relation to an incident which ended in one conviction of sexual battery.

Some say Damon deserves a second chance. Seems to me he had that second chance three times over.

But it is all irrelevant. I will bet bottom dollar he is on the K-State football team this fall. If he's not on our team, then he will be on someone else's.

Furthermore, he'll be seen as a study hero. Some say the reason for this is because he brings in bucks for the University and the community via increased ticket sales and enrollment.

I say there is another reason, though: the degradation of individual values.

Case in point: Friday's editorial in the Manhattan Mercury concerned the University of Nebraska's Lawrence Phillips and Christian Peter. Both of these idols were convicted of various forms of sexual battery.

Since the New England Patriots

eventually dumped Peters, the editorial concluded that "being good at sports isn't good enough." However, the fact remains that Peter was still drafted by the Patriots to begin with — despite his character. I'd like to think character matters in our society, but let's look at some more examples of apathy toward it.

Mike Tyson. True, he did serve his time for a rape conviction, but the public still seems to keep him in high esteem. Otherwise, how can you explain his high-priced, sell-out fights?

Madonna. I assume she will still be seen as the goddess of music, despite the fact she just purposely got herself pregnant with no intentions of having a father involved — other than in the bed.

Bill Clinton. The public merely makes jokes and accepts his sexual escapades as charismatic. How else can you explain the public's view of a 12-year-long affair between Clinton and Gennifer Flowers. This affair was exposed during his presidential campaign and only ended because of it. Yet, we elected this dope-smoking, draft-dodging, womanizing character just the same.

The public didn't correlate promiscuity and infidelity with low character or morals. It used to. What changed?

How about Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., drowning a woman in a river? How many decades has this drunk been re-elected just the same?

We accepted President Kennedy's fun with Marilyn Monroe. Again society showed its apathy by paying more than $200,000 for his golf clubs last week.

I'm not saying that to err is inhuman or unforgivable. What I am saying is when we hold up people as public idols who are so outrageously unrighteous, we are pulling ourselves down to their level of morality.

I propose that we forgive them, yes, but then let's boycott them out of the spotlight for at least a year or two, until they can prove themselves rehabilitated. Likewise, we should not elect them to our highest offices.

Jesus Christ was the only human to walk this earth without sin, but surely we can pick some better mentors than the scum bags listed above. Can't we?

■ The K-State women's tennis team received its first ever bid to the NCAA tournament. The team will face Utah in the first round of the tournament at 10 a.m., Friday on the campus of the University of Kansas.

Close-minded management, novice team killing Royals

Well, if you haven't noticed, the Royals are doing just as well as everyone predicted. The Royals own the cellar in the American League Central Division, and as of yesterday they owned the second-worst record in baseball at 9-18.

How can the management that runs the Royals be as closed-minded as it is?

It's running the team into the ground. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out what's going wrong.

First, let's start with what the Royals did in the off-season. The team released the heart and soul of the team in Wally Joyner, Greg Gagne and Gary Gaetti.

Joyner is on pace to make it to the All-Star game this season by leading the National League in batting, hitting .415 and carrying the San Diego Padres to first place in the NL West.

Gaetti, who led the Royals in home runs last year, is playing for the St. Louis Cardinals and Gagne, last year's short stop, is playing for the Dodgers.

Who did the Royals bring in to replace the proven veterans? Nobody.

Playing in the veteran's place are a few rising prospects in David Howard and Keith Lockhart, along with a few people who never panned out in the majors — Jose Offerman and Bip Roberts.

Offerman, who came over from the Dodgers in the off-season, owned the dubious record of having the most errors last season. This year Offerman is platooning in the infield, playing mostly first base of late. First base, because that's where he will do the least damage.

You can look up and down the roster, and you won't find a real team leader.

They are all either in their first or second year of the majors or are indifferent with the team management, which seems to be plain and simply running the team into the ground.

Kevin Appier couldn't handle the stress of playing with a bunch of minor leaguers last week, when he flew off the handle after a solid pitching performance on his part, but no one was there to back him up.

You can look for Appier to leave the team as early as this season if things don't start to turn around quick.

With a team batting average of .250, the Royals will own the cellar all season long.

On the subject of Johnny Damon, the guy who is featured on baseball cards as being the next Ken Griffey Jr. and a lock for the rookie of the year well, he's not off to a good start.

He's hitting .277 with only one home run.

I can't really blame the guy for his slow start. The team as a whole has hit only 11 home runs on the season. Brady Anderson for the Baltimore Orioles has matched the Royals' season stat.

Damon doesn't really have anyone to look toward for direction. Nobody is putting any kind of effort toward being a role model for this young team.

Had Joyner or Gaetti still been on the team this season, maybe some of the pressure would have been off Damon to produce runs.

If Damon stays with the Royals, anything he accomplishes will be all on his own. He won't be getting any guidance from his peers. That's not to say he can't be the next Ken Griffey Jr. It just means it's going to take time.

The thing that's killing this team is run production.

The pitching should be good enough to at least be a .500 team. Appier, the team ace, has an ERA of 3.62, and the team closer has an ERA 1.13. Also in the starting rotation is Tim Lincecum, who has a 2.81 ERA and Mark Gubicza, who has a 4.66 ERA.

Sure, the ERAs aren't that of a brilliant staff, but it should be good enough for a .500 season if only it had runs to back it up.

All this rests solely on the Royals' management.

The Royals won't have any kind of a contending team until they find an owner who is willing to spend some money on some good players.

The Royals need to be able to keep good veterans around like Appier, Joyner and Gaetti if they want a shot at the pennant. They need to be able to go out and pick up good free agents like a David Cone, Tony Gwynn or a Juan Gonzalez. Then they need to be able to retain those people.

Again, until the Royals find a decent team owner, they won't be any more competitive than the Padres of the 1980s.

AMES, Iowa — K-State slipped from its winning ways yesterday, losing both games to Iowa State in a double header that ended a four game winning streak.

The Wildcats dropped to 27-20 on the season, 11-13 in the conference. Iowa State improved to 18-26 and 9-12 in conference.

Sammy Cox drove in five runs, and Clark Jones homered twice as Iowa State beat K-State 14-8 in the second game of the doubleheader.

The Cyclones won the opener 16-8.

In the nightcap, Cox put the Cyclones on top 3-1 with a bases-loaded triple. Cox scored later, and Jones hit a solo shot to make it 5-1.

The Wildcats rallied for four runs in the third, including Todd Fereday's two-run single.

K-State trailed 7-6 in the fifth when the Wildcats took the lead on solo homers by David Hendrix and Scott Peopard.

The Cyclones rallied for seven runs in the eighth, sparked by a Cox two-run single. Scott Vance also added a solo home run for the Cyclones.
